TRACE ZUTA LEDGER CLEWS

U. S. TO RELEASE ROAD FUNDS FOR DROUGHT RELIEF

Loans Arranged for Stockmen, Too.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—With a view to furnishing employment to farmers without livelihoods as a result of the drought Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M. Hyde today made available to the states $121,857,000 in federal aid road funds which ordinarily would not have been apportioned until Jan. 1.

At the request of President Hoover the secretary, who had announced yesterday that he planned to move the allotment date up to Sept. 1, rushed the apportionments to completion within a few hours and invited the drought stricken states to coöperate in putting them to use.

Illinois Gets 5 Millions.

Illinois, under the apportionment, is entitled to $5,150,396; Indiana to $3,172,253; Iowa to $3,330,593; Michigan to $3,652,392, and Wisconsin to $3,075,234. Preference will be given in approving contracts to Illinois and Indiana, the Chicago area states most acutely affected by the drought.

Apportionment of the road funds was the most important of several developments in Washington today as various federal agencies went forward with the task of carrying out the relief program formulated by President Hoover at his governors' conference Thursday.

Credit to Livestock Interests.

The federal farm board today announced the extension of $5,000,000 credit to the Inter-Mountain Live Stock Growers' association, which will facilitate the shipping of live stock to pastures. At the same time the bureau of agricultural economics of the department of agriculture completed a survey discounting reports that the drought is forcing the wholesale marketing of livestock. The department also started a new survey in 28 states on livestock feed supplies.

President Hoover, who is spending the week-end at his Rapidan camp, kept in touch with the drought situation meanwhile through Secretary Hyde and Chairman Alexander Legge of the farm board who motored to the camp this afternoon.

Get Reports from Governors.

Mr. Hyde and Mr. Legge carried with them messages received at the White House from several governors reporting progress in the selection of state and county committees which will handle the drought relief program regionally and locally. The governors were asked to appoint first the banking representatives on their state groups who will assemble in Washington within a few days to work out the financial details of the relief program.

In allotting the road funds, Secretary Hyde explained that congress appropriated 125 million dollars for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1931. After deduction of 2.5 per cent for administrative expenses the balance of $121,875,000 was left.

"Because drought conditions are confined to only part of the states, and a balance of previous allotments remains unobligated to the credit of the states, the secretary will use his discretion as to the approval of projects," said Mr. Hyde's statement which specified that the following conditions must be complied with:

Conditions of Allotment.

1. That the state has obligated and has under construction all or practically all of the federal aid funds previously allotted.

2. That state funds be required for each project in an amount sufficient to meet the federal funds on the legally established basis, that is, a fifty per cent basis.

3. That the state highway department submit with each project a "reasonable showing" that the project, if expedited, would assist in providing employment in the drought areas.

Mr. Hyde explained further that although the emergency road work is expected to be done in only those states suffering from unemployment and drought it was considered wise that the apportionment be made to all the 48 states at one time.

Assistance for Ranches.

Action by the farm board in extending $5,000,000 to the Inter-Mountain Live Stock Growers' associtaion is expected to furnish welcome assistance to ranchers, especially in Montana whose pastures are dry and parched.

Through the federal intermediate credit bank at Spokane, Wash., it was said, the credit may be extended to

Four Ships Race to Sinking Liner

317 STICK WITH VESSEL AFTER S O S MESSAGE

Propeller Lost; Sea Pours In.

[By the Associated Press.]

More than 300 men, women, and children passengers and crew of the Union line steamship Tahiti, which became waterlogged and disabled in the south Pacific 460 miles southwest of Rarotonga, Cook islands, today were anxiously awaiting the arrival of the Norwegian freighter Penybryn, nearest of four vessels in that general vicinity rushing to render assistance.

Reports received yesterday in San Francisco direct from Suva and from the steamer Ventura said all on board had taken to lifeboats and abandoned the Tahiti.

A report from Wellington, N. Z., at 7 a. m. today, New Zealand time [4 p. m., Chicago daylight saving time yesterday] said the master of the disabled ship had countermanded the order to take to lifeboats and that the arrival of the Penybryn was expected Sunday afternoon, New Zealand time. Transfer of passengers and crew to the Penybryn was to take place before dark.

317 Aboard Waterlogged Ship.

The Tahiti, one of the largest ships plying the Pacific, left Wellington for San Francisco Aug. 12 with 175 passengers and a crew of 142. It was due in San Francisco Aug. 29.

The vessel got into trouble when it lost its starboard propeller and tailshaft and began to leak. The cause was not ascertained. The number 4 hold began to leak early today, New Zealand time [9:30 a. m., Chicago daylight time yesterday]. Capt. A. T. Toten ordered all aboard to lifeboats.

It was this order that was countermanded, presumably when it was realized the vessel would remain afloat until the Penybryn could reach it.

In addition to the Penybryn, three other vessels were rushing to the Tahiti. These were the Matson liner Ventura, en route from Suva; the Tufoa, diverted from the Fiji islands, and the Tague, en route from Mangaia. The Ventura was expected to reach the Tahiti tonight, New Zealand time.

Sea Rough, Weather Fair.

Names of the Tahiti's passengers were not immediately available. The only name mentioned in dispatches was that of Sir Hugh Allen, director of the British Royal College of Music.

[Other reports said Dr. F. A. Bennett, a New Zealand bishop, was also aboard.]

The sea was reported rough but the weather was fair.

The Tahiti, a twin screw liner of 7,898 gross tons, was built in Glasgow in 1904. It was operated by the Union Steamship company under British registry. It is 460 feet long, 55.5 feet wide, and 24.4 feet deep. Its officers are all New Zelanders. Capt. Toten was making his first voyage as its master.

Dispatches from Pago Pago late yesterday quoted a radiogram from the Tahiti as saying they were still holding on and the Ventura was 115 miles away, expecting to arrive 2 p. m., today, New Zealand time.

"All Passengers Still Aboard."

San Francisco, Aug. 16.—[U. P.]—A cable received from the home office of the Union Steamship company at Wellington, N. Z., late today, said that all passengers were still aboard the steamer Tahiti.

The theory of a defective radio set was advanced by Hind-Rolph agency officials. It was possible, they said, that the radio functioned perfectly until the final S O S and "abandon ship" call was sent, and after that it was good for short distances only, so that the rescinding order was heard by New Zealand stations, but not by other stations, such as Honolulu, Samoa, Suva, and by various ships at sea.

"Water Gaining Fast."

The cable to the Hind-Rolph agency said:

"Tahiti passengers, crew still aboard; water gaining fast.

"Penebryn, Norwegian steamer, due alongside 1 p. m., New Zealand time. Tofua, Ventura, due tomorrow [Monday]."

The Tahiti has been involved three times in more or less serious accidents. At its launching at Clyde, Scotland, the Tahiti nearly capsized. Some years ago it struck a ferry in Sydney harbor and several lives were lost. About a year ago it dropped its propeller as it was being warped in to its pier at San Francisco.

BANDITS TORTURE VICTIM, TAKE HIS HONEYMOON FUND

Andrew Yarc, 25 years old, a foreman for the Chicago Hardware Foundry company in North Chicago, and who lives in that suburb, went to the First National bank at Waukegan yesterday morning and drew $725 out for his honeymoon. He is to be married next week.

As he was returning to North Chicago a car with three men in it overtook him. One man climbed into his automobile, drew a gun and forced him to drive two miles west to a lonely road. There he was blindfolded and led into a barn. He had hidden his money under the back seat of his automobile and refused to tell where it was. The robbers slashed him with a knife on the arms and forehead, putting salt in the wounds until he told them the hiding place.

They kept him in the barn all day, he reported to the North Chicago police, returning him, bound and gagged, about 9 o'clock last night.

KLANSMEN BURN DE PRIEST EFFIGY AT PICNIC RALLY

An effigy of Congressman Oscar De Priest was burned last night as the climax of an all day picnic of Ku Klux Klansmen and their families at Santa Fe park, southwest of Chicago, near Willow Springs. A parade of 300 members in full regalia featured the ceremony.

Although the event had been widely advertised the attendance was said to have disappointed the promoters, only about 2,000 persons putting in an appearance. Hiram W. Evans, imperial wizard, was present, but did not speak.

U. S. Penalizes Lubliner as a Big Tax Evader

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Treasury officials are seeking to collect a quarter of a million dollars in back income taxes, penalties and interest from Harry M. Lubliner, Chicago theater owner, residing at 4858 Drexel boulevard, it was disclosed today. A petition seeking to have the treasury demand set aside was filed with the board of tax appeals.

The government charges that in a single year, 1925, Mr. Lubliner reported his income as $22,206 when, according to treasury investigators, his income actually was $327,047. The next year Mr. Lubliner reported an income of $18,465. The government insists that the theater man's income that year was $146,816.

Covers Seven Year Period.

The total bill against Lubliner represents an alleged income tax deficit covering a period from 1919 through 1926 plus penalties and interest. The income tax deficiency is set by the government at $130,381.91; penalties are listed as $65,190.98 and interest at $33,674.37. The penalties are levied in accordance with sections of the revenue acts specifying that "if any part of the deficiency is due to fraud with intent to evade the tax, then 50 per cent of the total amount shall be so assessed."

Lubliner is charged with failing to pay taxes on several hundred thousand dollars of partnership income received by the firm of Lubliner & Trinz, moving picture magnates.

The treasury also charges that Mr. Lubliner failed to pay taxes on $75,083 received in fees for managing a string of theaters, that he illegally deducted thousands of dollars from his taxable income by claiming his motor car and chauffeur were business expenses, that he illegally claimed additional exemption for private secretarial salaries and that he failed to pay taxes on dividends.

Notifies of Government Claim.

Robert H. Lucas, then commissioner of internal revenue, first notified Mr. Lubliner of the alleged tax deficiency on April 8, 1930. At that time he stated in a letter to the Chicagoan that "in accordance with the provisions of section 279 [a] of the revenue act of 1926, there has been assessed against you income taxes, penalties and interest amounting to $229,247.26 for the taxable years 1919 to 1926."

A statement included in the communication reported the following alleged tax deficiencies: $15,164 in 1919; $2,151.40 in 1920; $7,051.40 for 1921; $7,842.32 in 1922; $8,019.55 in 1923; $9,626.65 in 1924; $65,135.01 in 1925, and $15,391.43 for 1926. The largest penalties assessed were $32,567.51 for 1925 and $7,695.72 for 1926. Penalties, deficiencies and interest made up the quarter of a million total.

In 1925 Mr. Lubliner deducted from his income losses sustained in operating a racing stable, according to the government statement but this was disallowed.

The government contended the theater man received $41,200 in dividends from corporations, among them the West End and Pershing Theater companies, on which he failed to pay tax. The government documents state that the dividends "were purported to be paid to Dan Lubliner for service rendered," but that "the evidence indicates yourself and not your brother received the dividends." Lubliner insists the dividends "were paid to persons other than petitioner and do not represent taxable income to him."

VICE PRESIDENT DRAGS WOMAN FROM PATH OF VANDERBILT'S HORSES

Portsmouth, R. I., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Vice President Charles Curtis jumped from William H. Vanderbilt's coach to aid a woman knocked over by the horses here today.

The accident occurred at the entrance to Oakland farm, the Vanderbilt estate. The party was returning from the Newport horse show to a garden party with Everett Colby of Orange, N. J., prominent New York lawyer, at the reins.

The horses, frightened by a band, shied slightly and Mrs. Bertha Horton of Providence and Mrs. J. B. McLennan of Portsmouth were knocked over. The Vice President jumped from the coach to Mrs. Horton, who was not seriously injured, while Mayor Mortimer A. Sullivan of Newport dragged Mrs. McLennan from in front of the coach's wheels. Mrs. McLennan was taken for treatment to the Newport hospital.

Flies to India from London in 6½ Days

BY WILLIAM SHIRER.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

KARACHI, India, Aug. 16.—Completing the last stage of a journey of forty hours of almost continual day and night flying over the desert wastes of Syria, Iraq, and Persia, I arrived here tonight just six and one-half days after leaving London as a passenger on the Imperial Airway's weekly England-to-India air service.

Vasco di Gama, the first European to visit these parts, took eleven months in sailing from Libson, and the best speedy mail boats do it now in three weeks.

One Indian business man who alighted with me tonight left here three weeks ago, remained in London a whole week, returning home today in the same time as it would have formerly taken him to make the one way trip to London.

Egypt to India in 2 Days.

I was two days late from Cairo, because of storms and motor trouble over Greece, but we linked Epypt with India in the record breaking time of two days. For the pilots it was all a part of the day's work. They made up their forty-eight hours of tardiness by night flying over the desert areas with no marking beacons, negotiating two difficult landings at night by aid of kerosene flares. They took off each time a couple of hours later in total darkness.

Maintained principally as a mail service, this is the longest passenger airplane route in the world and gives its customers a fairly comfortable service, considering that planes transport their load one-fifth of the way around the globe, over high mountains, open sea, and desert wastes, and must stop in foreign countries, notably Jugo-Slavia, Greece, and Persia, where the customs and passport officials do everything possible to ruin the service by holding up the passengers.

Ordered Out of Plane.

I was ordered out of the plane by a minor official at Skoplje, Jugo-Slavia, just as the machine was taking off Monday morning after having flown there from London by way of Vienna. He didn't like the looks of my visa, but I was saved a week's delay by a wild auto dash to the headquarters of the chief of police, 5 miles away, who allowed me to depart.

The refusal of the Greeks to allow seaplanes to use the harbor of Salonika cost us a day, as it was too rough in the open sea, where the Hellenic authorities park flying boats to load passengers, although it could have been done in the port in five minutes.

The route includes the longest stretch of open sea flying of any passenger service in the world, the hop from northern Crete to Alexandria taking four hours, with no land in between.

Gas Caches in Desert.

By use of strategically located refueling stations, some of them only gasoline caches in the open desert, we were able to fly from Cairo to Karachi in two days with a plane with a fuel capacity of only five hours.

The plane was carrying seven passengers and a ton of mail. It was constructed especially for tropical flying, and it needed to be, as it was 120 degrees at Bagdad and Basra, two of our stops yesterday. The passengers were nearly prostrated by the heat.

Three engined biplanes are used throughout the route, with huge Calcutta flying boats plying over the Mediterranean hop. The route covers Vienna, Belgrade, Athens, Alexandria, Gaza, Bagdad, Basra, and Jask.

SCHULMAN SAYS "KITING" DEALS EXPLAIN CHECKS

Vault Disclosures Mystify Fisher.

The link between politics and crime in Chicago, hinted at for many years and definitely exposed for the first time in the grist of evidence hoarded in the secret safe deposit box of Jack Zuta, murdered vice lord and gang leader, was more strongly forged yesterday.

Evidence tending to show the means by which Zuta and his partners in crime made hundreds of thousands of dollars in vice and gambling enterprises and the liquor traffic, all without interference from city and county officials, was found in the records made public by Charles F. Rathbun, member of THE TRIBUNE law firm appointed as assistant state's attorney to investigate the murder of Alfred [Jake] Lingle, and by Pat Roche, chief investigator for State's Attorney Swanson.

Hear Explanations of Two.

These officials, with Assistant State's Attorney James E. McShane, also retained by THE TRIBUNE to aid in solving the Lingle murder, were poring over Zuta's records yesterday. Meanwhile they listened to a judge of the Municipal court and the lawyer brother of another judge trying to explain how their names appeared on checks found among Zuta's papers.

Other prominent politicians and public officials, it was reported, were worrying when they, too, would be called to account for dealings exposed in the now famous chest of political skeletons in the Zuta vault. A quantity of evidence thus far undisclosed is under investigation, the prosecutors said.

The Mysterious "M. K."

Interest yesterday hinged on the identity of the mysterious "M. K.," shown by Zuta's balance sheets to have received thousands of dollars from the profits of the gambling syndicate bossed by the dead gangster.

Reports received last night indicate that "M. K." is Matt Kolb, politician-gambler-collector of long standing, who has been known as the underworld representative of certain powerful county and city officials.

Kolb, who had long been a ward heeler on the northwest side, has been linked in beer brewing and beer running syndicates, in slot machine operations, and in the setting up of roulette and card games in the outlying districts of the county.

Records Show $80,693 Payment.

Zuta's records indicate the payment to "M. K.," under the entry reading: "M. K. Dividends," of $80,693.60.

In another record, under the heading of "Dividends Paid Out," the same initials of "M. K." appear, with sums opposite the initials ranging from $1,500 to $5,000. Ten such entries aggregate $27,775.40.

The records indicate these payments are for short periods, and that they represent only a small part of the totals piled up during the many months of the gang's activities, but taking the total of the entries showing payments to "M. K.," it is shown that he received $108,469.

This sum, it is reported, was divided by "M. K." between himself and the county and city officials whose coöperation was necessary to the undisturbed operation of the slot machines and gambling houses.

Kolb to Be Questioned.

Kolb, it is reported, will be questioned by Rathbun, Roche, and McShane, the three men whose discovery of the Zuta cache of records has created a sensation in Chicago.

Prosecutions under the evidence disclosed in Zuta's vault may be difficult, it was pointed out yesterday, because almost all of the records found are dated prior to 1927. The statute of limitations may prevent the prosecution of persons found to be guilty of crimes, unless it can be shown that conspiracies begun in prior years existed up until more recent years.

Nevertheless, it was declared that exposing the existence of alliances between politics and crime will have a wholesome effect. The prosecutors expressed the hope that the present disclosures may be the opening wedge leading to a full exposure of crooked politicians and public officials.

Judge Schulman Explains.

Judge Joseph W. Schulman of the Municipal court, and Attorney Louis I. Fisher were the two persons involved in the Zuta evidence who came forward with explanations yesterday.

Judge Schulman was disclosed by canceled checks and unredeemed notes found in Zuta's box to have received

It's a Good Time to Refurnish the Home

A man's idea about a house is that once it's furnished, it's furnished. Any woman knows that isn't true. The government a few years ago made a study of the expenditures of a number of Chicago families with three children. Presumably all of them had their houses fairly well equipped. And yet it was found that out of each $100 spent by the family, $4.40 went each year for furniture. There are always things to be purchased for the house. That's why Chicago's stores sell about $83,000,000 worth of furniture each year.

Right now is a good time to consider one's furniture requirements. The furniture stores are determined to increase their sales during August. Prices of furniture have been reduced as much as any other item in the family budget. They are lowest since the war.

$5,500 from the gangster between Dec. 21, 1921, and Dec. 29, 1925.

Schulman, who has been a member of the Municipal bench since 1920, went to the office of Rathbun, McShane and Roche, and said he had been informed by newspaper men at South Haven, Mich., where he was spending a vacation, that his name had appeared in the Zuta records.

The judge said he had hastened back to Chicago to explain his connection with the vice monger and gangster, and he then submitted to questioning by the prosecutors. When he emerged he appeared agitated, beads of perspiration standing upon his forehead.

Tells of Dealing with Attorney.

Then he repeated his explanation to newspaper men.

"I was elected to the bench in 1920," he said, "and had no further use for my law office. An attorney, Maurice I. Green, was looking for office space at the time, and some time in 1922 he took my office.

"I recall that I was buying or remodeling my home at that time, and that I was short of funds. I told Green about it and he said he would be able to get me the money.

"He said he would be able to discount my notes, so I gave him a note for $1,000, and later another note for $500. I didn't know he was getting the money from Zuta."

Asked About Zuta Signature.

Judge Schulman was asked how he could fail to know that since Zuta signed the checks, which were made payable to Schulman, and were endorsed by him.

"I didn't pay any attention to the signature on the checks," Schulman said. "I just put them through my bank.

"I needed more funds, and so I arranged with Green to 'kite' checks with him. Green would get me a check, and I would give him a check, dated several months ahead. I never noticed that the checks Green gave me were from Zuta.

"I didn't know Zuta then. I believe I met him in 1924, and since then I have chatted with him during occasional meetings. We would say 'Hello,' and that's about all."

It was pointed out to the judge that ont of the checks drawn by Zuta in favor of Schulman was dated in 1925. He hesitated a moment, and then said he couldn't remember the circumstances of that check. He said he knew Zuta at that time.

Admits His Indiscretion.

Judge Schulman also did not remember the circumstances of a check which he had written for $500 and made payable to Zuta, and which Zuta's bank records showed had been returned, unpaid, by Schulman's bank. This was in December, 1925.

"I admit I was indiscreet in taking the checks of a man without knowing where he got them," Schulman said. "Green never practiced in my court, and I never had any dealings of any kind with Zuta."

Investigator Roche was investigating to learn whether Judge Schulman had ever sat in the Morals court where he might have been in a position to extend favors to Zuta whenever Zuta's vice resorts were raided.

Chief Justice Harry Olson of the Municipal court said that in all Judge Schulman's years on the bench there was only one complaint against him. For the last six years, he said, Judge Schulman has sat in the civil branch of the court, and has not presided over the Morals court or other criminal branches.

Green a Zuta Lawyer.

The lawyer, Green, mentioned by Judge Schulman, was found to have been an attorney for Zuta.

"Judge Schulman sometimes borrowed money off me," Green said when interviewed. "I borrowed from him at times, too. I was Jack Zuta's attorney for a number of years, and we were personal friends. I don't see how the notes got in Zuta's possession. I may have hypothecated them with him, but he had access to my files, as I had to his, and he may have taken them.

"I remember the checks in 1925. I got the money for Judge Schulman, and later Zuta told me that the check which he got in return a month later had been sent back unpaid. I paid him and collected from the judge."

Attorney Fisher Appears.

Attorney Fisher, who was counsel for certain dog track interests, but denied representing the Zuta-Moran-Aiello dog track, the Fairview Kennel club, arrived at Rathbun's office seeking permission to view the checks on which his endorsement appeared.

One check was for $500, dated Oct. 4, 1926, and the other, for $100, was dated Feb. 11, 1927. Both were made payable by Zuta to cash, and bore Fisher's endorsement.

Fisher was shown the checks, and said the endorsements were his signatures. Then he declared that he was unable to remember how he obtained the checks.

"They may have been given me by some friends of mine for legal services, or for money due me in card games," Fisher said. "I don't remember them at all."

Denies Getting Zuta Money.

It was pointed out to Fisher that his name appears on the checks as the original endorser, indicating that he obtained the checks directly from Zuta, but he denied that. He said he had known Zuta well, and that he had been friendly with him, but he declared the gangster had never given him money.

Asked whether a $500 check given him less than four years ago could be forgotten by him so easily, Fisher repeated that he couldn't remember. During part of the time covered by the checks, Fisher was an assistant state's attorney under Robert E. Crowe, but he said he believed he was not serving in this public office on the dates given on the checks.

Asked to identify the names of the other endorsers who signed the two checks, Fisher said he thought one was signed by Art Kallish, who was in charge of the cardroom at the Elks club, and the other by Ben Bogeaus, who married Ethelind Terry, the actress.

Other Explanations Received.

Other explanations of the souvenirs preserved by the canny Zuta in his safe deposit box were made informally in newspaper interviews.

Homer K. Galpin, former chairman of the Cook county Republican committee, said he didn't know Zuta and that if Zuta had made any campaign contributions to the Republican organization he didn't know anything about them.

Charles V. Barrett, member of the board of review and formerly treasurer of the Republican county central committee, said he had no personal knowledge of Zuta's check for $500 that bore Barrett's rubber stamped indorsement as treasurer of the organization. Mr. Barrett said he did not know Zuta.

Former State Senator George Van Lent, whose name appeared as the recipient of some of Zuta's money, could not be found yesterday for an explanation.

Ex-Judge Eller Out of Town.

Emmanuel Eller, former judge of the Superior, Criminal, and Municipal courts and son of City Collector Morris Eller, boss of the 20th ward, was out of town and no explanation of the purposes of a $250 check drawn in his favor by Zuta on April 4, 1922, was available.

Eller has been off the bench nearly a year, and has been associated in the practice of law with Attorney Simon Herr, who said:

"This is an attempt to cast poison at Judge Eller. He will return Monday and I know he will explain satisfactorily."

Former Sheriff Charles Graydon was asked about the card in Zuta's box which was signed by Graydon and instructed the members of all departments of the sheriff's office to extend courtesy to Zuta.

"I never gave it to him personally," Graydon said. "He probably got it through some friend. There were 8,000 of those cards out, practically all to representative business men. When I first took office I issued cards for individuals through their friends, but when I got smarter I had the individual appear personally. That's why I know I didn't give Zuta his card personally."

Policeman Makes Denial.

Police Sergeant Richard J. Williams denied receiving from Zuta the $600 for which Williams signed a note found in the gangster's vault. He said the note, made payable to himself and endorsed in blank, was given by him to a man named Masse, for a loan he arranged to buy his home. He said he had no idea how it came into Zuta's possession. He had never been asked to pay it, Williams said, but always was ready to do so on demand.

Sergt. Williams, until his recent transfer to the traffic division, was doing investigating work for Albert H. Brunker, chairman of the Civic Safety commission, a reform organization. During this work for Brunker he was found around vice resorts by policemen from the state's attorney's office.

Acting Police Commissioner Alcock said he would take no action regarding Sergt. Williams until he has received official notification about the note in Zuta's possession.

Other Names Involved.

Roche said the records contained many other names that may be made public later after he and his aids have a chance to investigate them. Unquestionably they are records of graft payments, Roche said, and he was making an inquiry regarding the notation under disbursements, "East Chicago—$3,500," which was suspected to have been protection money paid to police of the East Chicago avenue station.

In the records were transactions extending over a period of 15 years. Roche said, some of which were amazing. Zuta may have kept them as a constant threat over the heads of all who had ever accepted money from him or he may have kept them to spread trouble after his death.

CASHIER ROBBED OF $600.

A bandit yesterday obtained $600 from Miss Gertrude Vietzke, 25 years old, cashier of the Brooks Laundry company, 602 North boulevard, Oak Park.

LINGLE MURDER INQUIRY MOVES STEADILY AHEAD

Discovery of Zuta Papers Latest Development.

Investigation of the murder of Alfred Lingle, undertaken by THE TRIBUNE immediately after he was shot to death on June 9, has led into the maze of gangland politics.

The progress made by State's Attorney Swanson, operating through State's Attorney Charles F. Rathbun and Pat Roche, chief investigator for the state's attorney, has included the capture of Frank Foster, notorious gunman now under indictment for the Lingle murder, and the exposure of the records of Jack Zuta, vice monger and gang leader.

Almost immediately after Lingle's assassination, THE TRIBUNE offered to State's Attorney Swanson the services of Mr. Rathbun, who had previously been offered a permanent appointment to Mr. Swanson's staff. The cost of renting headquarters and meeting many other expenses was underwritten by THE TRIBUNE.

Foster Seized in Los Angeles.

Then the search for Lingle's slayers began. Information was obtained that Foster, who was identified as purchaser of the revolver with which Lingle was slain, was hiding in Los Angeles, and Roche sent investigators to that city. After days of quiet investigation Foster was found and arrested.

He fought extradition to Illinois but Prosecutor Rathbun sent witnesses to California and finally the courts there ordered Foster's return. Then, during a motion by Foster's attorneys to have him released on bail, there was a dramatic court scene in which Anthony Ruthy, the traffic policeman, a man from the scene of Lingle's murder, picked out Foster as the one he had chased. Foster is still in jail.

Investigate Zuta Murder.

Then came the murder of Jack Zuta in Waukesha county, Wisconsin. Acting upon information that Zuta had arranged for Lingle's murder, and had hired and paid the slayers, Rathbun and Roche went to Waukesha and began an inquiry into the Zuta killing. This led to the discovery of Zuta's secret safe deposit boxes, the contents of which were seized last Thursday.

There followed the disclosure of Zuta's financial dealings with judges, public officials and politicians, the first definite evidence obtained in establishing a link between politics and crime.

Investigation of all the evidence found in the Zuta vaults, much of which has not yet been made public, will be made by Rathbun and Roche on the theory that if the widely published statements that Zuta had Lingle murdered are true, the link which will establish this fact may thus be found.

The Rosenheim Murder.

During the investigation of the Lingle murder it was disclosed for the first time that Julius Rosenheim, who had been murdered by gangsters four months before, and whose killing had been ascribed to his stool pigeon activities and then promptly forgotten, had been a paid informant of the Chicago Daily News.

After the Lingle murder interest in the Rosenheim slaying was revived by a St. Louis newspaper man, and it was then that the Daily News, in a signed article by Leland H. Reese, gangland reporter for the News, disclosed that Rosenheim had been supplying Reese and the News with information concerning gang activities.

Investigation of the Rosenheim murder, thus revived, appears now to be stagnant. No developments have been announced by the authorities.

Start Inquiry Into Mystery Death of State Senator Joyce

State Senator John T. Joyce.

Mysterious circumstances surrounding the sudden death of State Senator John T. Joyce [29th], yesterday prompted Coroner Bundesen to order an analysis of the body's tissues and fluids and to set an inquest for 10 a. m. tomorrow. Senator Joyce was found dead in bed in his apartment at 207 East Chestnut street by Mrs. Joyce. He was 36 years old.

A post mortem examination revealed, the coroner said, that Joyce came to his death "by cerebral anemia due to toxic causes," which was the finding of Dr. Paul Schmitt after an autopsy. Since a complete analysis will probably require ten days' time, it was not expected that much testimony on the chemical causes of death will be presented at the inquest in Shute's undertaking rooms, 716 N. State street.

In addition to the present medical uncertainty, there were other elements to complicate the inquiry. One was a contention, first advanced by the family, that Joyce had been poisoned for his alleged disclosures of election day violence before the grand jury—a story he was to have continued tomorrow. There was, also, his wife's assertion that she had heard him scream twice just before he died.

Word came to the coroner that Joyce had either suspected or had named Tommy Abbott, gangster, as one of the gunmen "sent by the state's attorney's office," in the language of his court testimony before Judge Jarecki, into the 42nd ward on primary day. These hoodlums terrorized the voters with machine guns, the senator had said, and it was presumed that he named the participants before the grand jury Friday.

Toured Ward on Friday.

Friday night the senator left his apartment, telling his wife that he was "going around the ward." At 10 p. m. he met his brother, Policeman Patrick Joyce, at Wells and Oak streets, and talked with him for some time, leaving to go home. He arrived there about 11:15 p. m.

Early yesterday morning, Mrs. Joyce was awakened by her husband's moans, which she attributed to catarrh, from which he suffered. She went to another room to sleep and did not awaken until she heard screams from his bedroom about 11 a. m., she said. He was dead when she reached him.

Dr. Schmitt's examination of the brain showed evidences of a blood clot, he said, and it was thought possible that death was due to apoplexy.

Joyce was born May 24, 1894, and lived in the district he represented in the upper house of the legislature all his life. He was educated in public and parochial schools and served for a year in the navy during the war. He was engaged in the real estate and insurance business and was first elected to the house of representatives in 1920. Two years later he was elected senator and was reelected in 1926 and renominated last April.

His spring nomination resulted in a recount which showed him victorious over his contesting opponent, Wallace F. Kirk.

Joyce's death leaves a vacancy on the November ballot, which must be filled, according to Francis X. Busch, attorney for the election commissioners, by a candidate named by the district senatorial committee. In the 29th district the committee consists of Attorney Robert M. Woodward, Harbormaster Charles J. Agnew, and Walter E. McCarthy.

DEAN OF FRENCH ACTORS STRICKEN WITH PARALYSIS

SAINT CYR LES SECQUES, Department of Var, France, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Eugene Silvain, dean of the Comédie Française, known as one of the greatest French actors in the last half century, has been stricken with partial paralysis in his villa here and temporarily deprived of speech. The noted player is 79 years old. In spite of his advanced age, however, his physicians hold hopes for recovery.

Some years ago M. Silvain was forced out of the theater as being too old. He brought suit in the courts, won, and was restored to full activity, only to retire of his own volition last year.

He is an ardent chess player. At the Café de la Régence, where Napoleon sometimes used to play now and then, the aged actor would become so interested in the game that he would forget his theater engagements. Then he would have to be called just before the curtain went up. This annoyed his associates.

CHARGE $500,000 DEAL ON CHICAGO GARBAGE WAGONS

Trailer Purchases Under Attack in Suit.

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

In a bill of particulars filed yesterday in the United States District court, Attorneys Newell Mecartney and Walter W. Duft made charges in connection with the city's purchase of 1,000 garbage trailers from the Highway Trailer company of Edgerton, Wis.

To obtain part of this business—totaling in excess of $1,400,000—it is alleged in the bill that the manufacturing company paid out more than $500,000 "to various persons."

It is charged also that James W. Menhall, president of the Highway Trailer company, told his stockholders at one time that the company was unable to pay dividends because it "had paid out over $500 per trailer to officials of the city of Chicago to obtain such business."

Charges Grow Out of Suit.

Mecartney and Duft are attorneys for Robert M. Telfer Jr., former representative of the Fruehauf Trailer company of Detroit, against which he has brought suit, asking $100,000 for compensation and expenses. In his original bill, filed in the Superior court on May 18, Mr. Telfer asserts that part of his duties was the "elimination of unfair competition." It was in the performance of this task that he says he collected his information of the alleged $500,000 payments.

The law firm of Kirkland, Fleming, Green & Martin, representing the Fruehauf Trailer company, had the Telfer suit transferred to the federal court on July 2. This firm said it would demur to the suit unless a bill of particulars was filed.

The filing of particulars by Attorneys Mecartney and Duft followed. The bill said at one point:

"That, pursuant to instructions [of the Fruehauf company] the plaintiff [Telfer] continued his investigations and discovered that all the trailers sold to the city of Chicago by the said Highway Trailer company were on a non-competitive basis, there being no bids nor specifications specified in any of the orders.

Payment of $500,000 Alleged.

"That a large sum of money, more than $500,000, was paid by said Highway Trailer company through alleged co-partnerships known as Julius Albright & Co., National Trailer Sales company and Streits Sales company. That the alleged co-partnerships were simply a means of covering up payments to various persons. That the partnerships were not legitimate dealers nor did they have any dealings with the city nor did they make any sales thereto."

The advisability of using garbage trailers in Chicago was the subject of an inquiry in 1922. About eighty trailers of seven different makes were bought and city officials later expressed a preference for the Highway Trailer product. Up to 1928—no deals have been made since then—the city bought 1,145 trailers at a total contract cost of $1,652,000, minus certain discounts for speedy payments.

Of these trailers 1,006 were purchased from the Highway Trailer company, but the allegations of Mr. Telfer apparently refer to the purchase of only 905 of these, for which the contract price is $1,495,775.

Fruehauf Co. Hires Telfer.

The bill of particulars asserts that the Fruehauf company represented to Telfer about the time he was employed on Oct. 3, 1928, that it was "suspicious of the methods by which the Highway Trailer company was able to obtain business from municipalities at a higher price than the bid put in by the defendant (the Truehauf company).

Telfer started on the job. One of the transactions he investigated, according to the bill, relates to the sale of 24 units manufactured by the Highway Trailer company to Birmingham, Ala.

Telfer was also employed to sell Fruehauf trailers. In that connection the bill of particulars said he discovered:

"That the city of Chicago had one contract (the last up to date) with the Highway Trailer company calling for 285 trailers at a price of $1,595 each without covers or brakes and that there was contained in the contract a clause to the effect that if the city discovered within a year where the Highway Trailer company had sold any trailers of like design and quality to any municipality for less than that charged the city of Chicago, the Highway Trailer company would refund to Chicago the difference between the price of trailers sold to such municipalities and $1,595 on each of the 285 trailers."

Trailers Sold to Birmingham.

"It was discovered that the Highway Trailer company had sold to the city of Birmingham 24 trailers of the same design as those sold to Chicago, at a price of $1,087 each, and that there was included in the price additional equipment so that the net price to Birmingham for trailers identical to those sold to Chicago was $887 each."

The bill of particulars said Telfer presented this information to Commissioner of Public Works Wolfe, and that officials of the public works department and of the corporation counsel's office "accepted such information, but did not act upon the same."

Then the bill presents another picture as follows:

"The president of the Highway Trailer company, James W. Menhall, called upon the officials of the defendant [Fruehauf] corporation in an attempt to stop the defendant from having the plaintiff [Telfer] further investigate the methods used by the Highway Trailer company.

"Shortly thereafter Joseph E. Moody, consulting engineer of the department of public works of Chicago, called upon officials of the defendant corporation, on or about Feb. 22, 1930, and the officials of the defendant corporation informed the plaintiff that Moody had insisted that as a prerequisite to the defendant obtaining any business from Chicago they discontinue the investigation conducted by the plaintiff."

Moody Gives Explanation.

Moody said yesterday that he happened to be on a vacation and called on the Fruehauf company to protest against the letters which Telfer had been writing to the department of public works. Moody said he interpreted the letters as threats.

Regarding the $500,000 alleged to have been paid by the Highway Trailer company to sales agencies, Mr. Moody said:

"The department had no dealings with the sales agencies. The payments for the trailers were made to the Highway Trailer company and Mr. Menhall explains that his contracts with the sales agencies provided that they should have their commissions on all business done in their territory regardless of whether they obtained it. Automobile makers have such contracts.

"We believe that we did not pay an excessive price for the trailers.

Asked About Sales Agencies.

"I do not see that it is any of our concern what the Highway Trailer company did with its money after we paid for what we received."

"Did you see these contracts between the Highway Trailer company and its sales agencies," Moody was asked.

"No," he replied.

"Did you ask to see them?"

"No."

"What is Mr. Menhall's explanation for having three sales agents for trailers sold in Chicago?"

"I do not know."

Commissioner of Public Works Wolfe said several times during his long investigation of the subject that he desired to get the facts.

ST. LOUIS ENDURANCE FLYERS 3 DAYS PAST RECORD OF HUNTERS

Lambert-St. Louis Field, St. Louis, Mo., Aug 16.—[U. P.]—From the old spattered windows of a monoplane cabin, two flyers looked out tonight on the flickering lights of the world below, which they left 27 days ago.

All remained well with the refueling endurance record breaking plane, The Greater St. Louis, as more hours were added to its record.

At 11:11 p. m., central standard time, the monoplane had been in continuous flight 640 hours.

It was more than three days beyond the Hunter brothers' record and 20 days past the mark of The Question Mark, which made the first long refueling flight in early 1929.

The motor sputtered for the first time since the flight started shortly after 3 p. m., and the flyers flew low over the field. In a few minutes the sputtering ceased and members of the ground crew said the cause was due to shifting by the pilots of the gas intake from a fuselage tank to one in the wings.

Elmira, N. Y., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Miss Aileen Holmes and Miss Mabel Husa, New York City, directresses of the Young Communist league camp at Vanetten, today were sentenced by Justice of the Peace William Westbrook, Vanetten, to pay a fine of $50 each and serve three months in the Monroe county penitentiary, at Rochester. All attempts to get the justice to parole the girls failed, he insisting that they must be jailed as a warning to communists that they could not trifle with the American flag or teach un-Christian doctrines. The defendants were charged with descrating the flag.

Acting Chief of Police Charles F. Paasch last night ordered his policemen to enforce the order of the police committee of the Evanston city council to abate the auto horn nuisance.

HOSPITAL HEAD ARRESTED AFTER STATE INQUIRY

Accused as Violator of Medical Laws.

Robert E. Parks, general manager of the Des Plaines Emergency hospital, was arrested last night on a warrant charging violation of the state medical laws. Parks came to the attention of the authorities following the death of Paddy Harmon, sports promoter, on July 22, after Harmon and his wife had received medical treatment in the hospital after an automobile accident.

Parks was arrested at the hospital by Alfred Mitchell, chief of police of La Grange Park, on warrant sworn out by Inspector Charles Storey of the department of registration and education, and returned to La Grange Park for a hearing before Justice of the Peace James L. Henry. He was released on $200 bond.

Within the last three weeks nine victims of automobile accidents, three of whom have died, have been treated at the Des Plaines hospital. Parks, according to the investigating state officials, has no license to practice medicine in any state. Those who died after treatment in the hospital were: Harmon; Murray MacLeod, president of three northwest side banks; and Mrs. Marie Przyborski, wife of Max Przyborski, chairman of the Lake county Republican central committee.

Denies Posing as Doctor.

Parks last night denied that he had posed as a doctor at the hospital, saying he is general manager of the institution and that all treating of patients there is done by licensed doctors.

Municipal Judge Asa Adams sentenced Parks to one year in the Bridewell and fined him $200 on March 30, 1923, after it had been shown he had been working as an auto mechanic by day and a doctor by night. At that time it was brought out that his medical education had been gained while he was a trusty in the Bridewell hospital after he had been sentenced on a statutory charge.

Before he was sentenced by Judge Adams Parks had been on the staff of the United States Public Health Service hospital, on Drexel boulevard, for two weeks on the strength of a forged certificate from Rush Medical school. Later, it was charged, he opened an office at 4122 Grand boulevard as a physician ond surgeon, displaying four forged certificates. After serving his Bridewell sentence he disappeared.

Discovered at Hospital.

The presenting of a bill for $200 to Frank Harmon, adopted son of Paddy Harmon, for medical services for Mr. and Mrs. Harmon, was the first revelation state officials had concerning Parks' new position. Harmon refused payment when he discovered Parks was not a qualified physician after he had notified state officials.

According to Inspector Storer, friends and relatives of the accident victims criticised the treatment given by Parks and declared his conduct was highly unethical. Mrs. Harmon told of being left to lie on the floor from 10 a. m. until 7 p. m. A minor gash in her leg was treated immediately after the accident, but bruises and cuts on her hip were not noticed until friends insisted that she be undressed and placed in bed, she said. At the time, witnesses said, Parks asked about payment of his bill and said he would insist on cash.

Family Asks Investigation.

Following the accident on Aug. 6, as a result of which Mr. MacLeod and Mrs. Przyborski lost their lives, members of the Przyborski family asked for an investigation. While Mrs. Przyborski was in bed under the care of another staff doctor, Parks asked Max Przyborski Jr., her son, if he had made arrangements for an undertaker and suggested a certain Des Plaines undertaker, according to Mrs. Przyborski's son, who quoted Parks as saying: "She's going to die, and my friend might as well have the business." Mrs. Przyborski died at the hospital on the night of the accident.

Mr. McLeod requested that he be removed from the hospital the next day and was moved by members of his family. Dr. A. E. Budde of North Chicago was called into the case by William R. Dalziel, president of the Lake State bank of North Chicago, a friend of Max Przyborski. Dr. Budde insisted on removal of the patients. He said the hospital was dirty and lacked equipment.

Bill for $618 Presented.

The bill for the treatment of the Przyborski party was presented on the night of the accident and amounted to $618. This was paid by Mr. Dalziel. The next morning when he tried to superintend the removal of the patients an additional bill of $65 was presented. This included room and meals for two highway policemen who remained in the hospital over night preparatory to arresting Pryzborski for reckless driving. This bill also was raid and no arrests were made.

HOOVER STUDIES AVIATION DATA AT RIVER CAMP

Policy of Co-operation to Be Mapped Out.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Facts and figures upon which President Hoover will base a new aviation policy calling for greater coöperation between government and commercial aviation were placed before the President today at a conference at the Rapidan fishing camp.

During the conference President Hoover was informed that American aviators now fly more miles annually than all the rest of the world combined. This includes flying by government and civilian personnel. The president was advised that 250,000 passengers were carried by American planes last year. American manufacturers, according to information reaching Mr. Hoover have a plane manufacturing capacity of 5,000 planes annually while approximately 3,500 are turned out each year. The annual replacement needs are around 3,000.

The data picturing the nationwide aviation situation as it exists today was given to President Hoover by the three assistant secretaries for air and W. Irving Glover, assistant postmaster general in charge of air mail. Col. Charles A. Lindbergh sat in with President Hoover and the four government officials during the conference in an advisory capacity.

The three aviation secretaries in the round table discussions were F. Trubee Davison, assistant secretary of war, David S. Ingalls, assistant secretary of the navy, and Clarence M. Young, assistant secretary of commerce. These three officers together with Mr. Glover arrived at the camp loaded with data which, when compiled, gave President Hoover a working idea of aviation progress during the last year in commercial, military, and mail fields.

The conference was called, White House officials announced, to enable Mr. Hoover to have all the facts regarding the progress of the industry, the amount of coöperation now existing between the various government departments and between the government and the aviation industry, the future of aviation in this country, and the progress being made by other countries in the aviation field.

Manufacturing Surveyed.

Particular attention was paid by the President to the relationship between military and naval aviation to the aviation industry. While no statement was made, it is understood President Hoover delved into the question of whether private manufacturing plants and air companies had not now reached a stage of development where it would be no longer necessary for the war and navy departments to maintain large quantities of military aviation on hand to meet emergencies.

As the aviation industry expands it is known the President hopes to cut down the number of planes kept on hand by the military and naval services and depend on commercial companies to furnish the planes in a hurry in case of a national emergency.

Plans Economy Program.

Emphasis was also placed by President Hoover upon ways and means of effecting economy in the war, navy, commerce, and postoffice air fields without retarding the present expansion programs. At present, it was stated, the governmental outlay for aviation is 120 million annually.

R-100 Home Safe; Battle at Sea Reveals Faulty Fabric

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

CARDINGTON, Aug. 16.—Hours overdue, but not seriously damaged by the overnight battle with Atlantic storms, the dirigible R-100 reached its base at Cardington in brilliant weather this morning, and was moored this noon after completing the crossing from Montreal, according to the ship's log, in 57 hours and 12 minutes. It failed in its endeavors to better the Graf Zeppelin's record of 55 hours 44 minutes for the eastward crossing.

The bright sun and cheering crowds were a contrast to the trials the giant ship underwent in the last hours of the flight when the course was repeatedly altered in order to make progress against 45 mile head winds which reduced her speed to 15 miles an hour.

Suffered from Rain.

The ship also suffered from the heavy rain. The downpour penetrated the fabric, and the passengers and crew were given a cold breakfast this morning because the electric cooker was short circuited. Otherwise the ship was not damaged.

The landing crew which had been on duty since late last night, seized the vessel at 10:30 a. m., Greenwich time (5:30 a. m., Chicago daylight time), and pulled it to the mooring wast as it dumped tons of ballast water. The passengers stood at the windows waving to the crowds below. The welcoming group was headed by Lord Thomson, minister of the air.

The customs officers were the first to go aboard and thereafter officers and passengers poured out asking for smokes which had been denied them for more than two days.

Find Fabric Faulty.

Wing Commander R. G. D. Colmore, director of airship development, who was a passenger on the voyage, declared that the ship had proved her air worthiness and was remarkably steady during the buffeting by the wost storm which was encountered Thursday night. But all the officers agreed that the fabric of the ship had proved faulty.

Two rents appeared in the hull during the flight and its weakness was shown by the penetration of the rain. Now that the R-100 was completed all its tests it will be turned over to the government. It is said a new covering is already under consideration.

Had Fuel to Spare.

The R-100 set out to Montreal from Cardington on the morning of July 29, and completed its westward cruise in less than 76 hours, hanging up a new record. She carried an ample supply of provisions and fuel for a much longer trip, made both crossings and landed today with 3,200 gallons of gasoline in the tanks.

There is a possibility that the ship will be pressed into Canadian passenger service soon. The next cruise is tentatively set for next month.

Gas Tanks Collapse.

CARDINGTON, Eng., Aug. 16.—[U.P.]—A number of gasoline tanks fell from their supports and penetrated the outer envelope of the R-100 as the airship was being refueled here tonight.

LOTTIE BRENNER DIVORCES 'COUNT' IN FOURTH SUIT

Wins Decree on Charge of Misconduct.

Mrs. Lottie Brenner Dechow, 55 years old, was granted a divorce yesterday from Henry Dechow, who had styled himself "Count Enrique von Buelow," before Circuit Judge Craig Hood. Von Buelow, who has admitted he is not a count, did not contest the suit. Mrs. Dechow's attorney, Barratt O'Hara, offered a statement showing Dechow had relinquished his dower rights.

The marital difficulties of Mrs. Dechow, widow of Nathan T. Brenner former alderman and wealthy manufacturer, and the bogus count who is 19 years her junior, have occupied the attention of the courts for several months. Three previous suits for divorce were withdrawn by Mrs. Dechow when it was reported the couple had become reconciled.

Drops Suit After Robbery.

The Dechows were married at Crown Point, Ind., May 7, 1929. They met in Central America where Dechow was a commercial aviator. Mrs. Dechow was left $750,000 by her first husband.

The first suit, filed last March and charging Dechow with misconduct with several unnamed women, was withdrawn following the robbery of their home, at 5839 Sheridan road, by gunmen posing as census takers. Mrs Dechow explained she had discovered her husband was not the worst person in the world and that he had been beaten by the gunmen and she was nursing him back to health.

The second and third suits also were dismissed. The fourth suit, filed last month, amplified the charges of cruelty and misconduct. Mrs. Dechow testified their separation was mainly due to her husband's refusal to work.

Refused Bank Account Plea.

"He wanted me to sign a paper giving him the power of attorney," she said. "He also wanted me to establish a joint bank account. When I refused he twisted my arm and pushed me over a chair."

Her testimony was supported by three witnesses. The testimony of Benjamin Park, 1727 Jarvis avenue, brought a laugh from spectators when he told of wandering around the Dechow home in July, 1929, when he and his wife called. He strayed into a bedroom, he said, and found Dechow and a pretty young woman whom he did not recognize. Park said he begged his pardon and withdrew.

"What name would you like to resume?" Judge Hood asked Mrs. Dechow.

"Lottie G. Brenner," she replied. "That's a pretty good name."

BUGLER HERO WHO LED ASSAULT ON PEKING IS RETIRED FROM ARMY

Fort Benning, Ga., Aug. 16.—(AP)—The bugler boy who was first over the walls of Peking during the Boxer rebellion in 1900 was retired today, almost thirty years to a day from the date of the historic exploit that brought him the congressional medal of honor and an appointment to the West Point Military academy.

Lieut. Col. Calvin P. Titus, an instructor in the infantry school at Fort Benning, is en route to Los Angeles. Titus was an enlisted man when the Americans stormed the city of Peking, Aug. 14, 1900.

Titus' colonel believed that if the wall could be climbed the Americans might surprise the Boxers. Titus volunteered for the job. He climbed the 30 foot wall, pulled a rifle after him, and opened fire on the enemy. Other Americans followed.

Congress voted him a cadetship at West Point and President Roosevelt went to the military academy and pinned the medal of honor on Titus' blouse.

Col. Titus' son is a West Point graduate and is commissioned in the air corps.

NANKING ARMY CRUSHES REBEL TROOPS AT TSINAN

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SHANGHAI, Aug. 16.—The rout of the northern rebel forces on the Shantung front, said to have resulted in the loss of practically two-thirds of Gen. Yen Hsi-shan's army, means the early collapse of the entire rebellion, it is believed here on dispatches sent from both Nanking and Peiping today.

Gen. Chiang Kai-shek's army, aided by bombing planes, demoralized the rebels by an encircling movement at Tsinan. At first there was heavy street fighting in Tsinan, but the northern forces surrendered when they were hemmed in against the banks of the Yellow river. Large stores of munitions, considerable artillery, and two airplanes were seized.

It is expected that Gen. Yen's troops will retreat to Tientsin or possibly back to Shansi province. It was stated that there is serious uneasiness prevailing in both Tientsin and Peiping, and that many politicians are making early plans to depart.

This will be also heard. J. Wesley Jones, Edward J. Boatner, and James A. Mundy, all famous Negro conductors, will, one after another, lead the singers through these wonderful compositions, songs that touch the heart with their honesty and beauty.

Or, again, try to imagine the magnificent Hallelujah chorus from Handel's great oratorio, "The Messiah," sung by a chorus of 5,000. This will be directed by one of the most brilliant choral conductors of the present generation, Noble Cain.

This last is nothing short of history making. Nothing of the sort has ever been attempted before This huge group of singers is representative of the many thousands who have sung "The Messiah" in their own choral organizations and all of Chicagoland has been invited to take part. Any one who has ever sung "The Messiah" in church choirs, choral societies, groups of singers of whatever nature, and would like to get together with other singers and do it again is invited to become a member of this great chorus.

For several months preparations for the festival have been actively going on in Chicagoland. Band has competed against band, drum corps against drum corps, chorus against chorus, battalions of soloists have appeared before their judges—all to select the best music and the best musicians of Chicagoland for an enormous meeting.

A Night for Prize Winners.

So next Saturday night the prize winning band of five states will play for the multitude, the prize winning drum corps will exhibit itself in rhythmic evolutions, the prize winning chorus will sing, prize winning soloists of one sort and another will display their prowess.

And a superb concert band, directed by Mr. Grabel, will play the Anvil Chorus from "Il Trovatore" assisted by a special squad of aproned anvilists. The band also will play Tschaikowsky's famous "1812" overture to the roaring obbligato of artillery. These and other numbers will be in addition to the massed bands and massed choruses.

Chance for All to Sing.

At the end there will be an extra thrill, for Rollin Pease, famous all over the country as a community song leader, has consented to lead every one, choristers and audience, in community singing. Every one knows the thrill of singing old familiar numbers when hundreds and thousands of others join in. This is what is going to happen Saturday night.

Even when the words come only faintly to the memory there is a thrill about recalling the melody. Imagine, then, hearing one side of Soldiers' field competing against the other side, then both sides joining in a grand, surging avalanche of music.

Though Soldiers' field is a vast inclosure capable of seating 100,000 persons without crowding, no one need have the slightest fear of not being able to hear all that is going on. The most recent equipment for electrical sound transmission has been installed throughout the field. Any auditor in the most remote corner will therefore be able to hear every announcement and every sound.

The Fragrant Lotus Lures Chicagoans to Grass Lake

LOTUS FLOWERS BLOOM AT LAKE NEAR CHICAGO

Cast Spell Over Visitors by Their Beauty.

Many a poem and legend has described what a difficult time Odysseus, wandering Greek of old, had when his sailors tasted of the lotus in "the land in which it seemed always afternoon," and thereafter refused to go home.

No doubt certain skeptical readers from the time of Homer to the present day have thought the charm attributed to the lotus was exaggerated. Be that as it may, the lotus is blooming not far from Chicago, and let it be here set down that there is something hynoptic simply in looking at the blossoms and smelling their delicate perfume.

Thousands of motorists have visited Grass lake, an easy two hours' run from Chicago, to see the lotus flowers since they began blooming early in August. Their season of blooming last year lasted until Sept. 5. Grass lake is one of the Chain 'o Lakes and is situated three miles west of Milwaukee avenue. From that road the motorist follows the Lake Villa road, Ill. 59-A, to the Grass lake road, turning left there and continuing about two miles westward.

Considerable discussion has taken place over the question of just what kind of lotus was the Homeric lotus, or that found in the Libyan district of the Lotophagi, or Lotus eaters—a region from which a caravan route led to Egypt.

It is agreed by historians, however, that it bore a fruit to eat of which was to forget. The lotus which blooms on Grass lake bears no fruit. But Ed Smith, who lives by the lake and rows visitors out to see the lotus flowers, has a problem, just as Odysseus had.

"Seems like once they get near enough to smell the flowers they never want to go home. I have a time getting them to leave, and all the time people at the other end of the lake waiting for me to take them across," he complained.

Perhaps the rare bloom which so mysteriously graces Grass lake—for its origin is unknown and unexplained by botanists—is the Nelumbo nelumbo lotus. The dictionary says that one lotus is of the water lily family, and of that family there are two special kinds—the white and the blue lotus of the Nile and the Nelumbo nelumbo, or sacred lotus, "no longer found in the Nile, but anciently used in religious rites in Egypt."

A pale yellow, with waxy petals and a center which exudes a strange and delicate perfume, the lotus flowers stand above the water on stems three or four feet high, their round leaves about two feet across.

The lotus beds of Grass lake are among the few left in the world, it is thought.

SEE WASHINGTON ACTION IN KRAFT SCANDAL OF I.N.G.

Demotion of Investigator Is Under Fire.

Developments in the most recent Illinois National Guard scandal—the alleged abstraction of $200,000 at the Broadway armory—yesterday gave rise to reports that the war department at Washington will investigate the case. One of the things to be ascertained, according to the reports, is why Arthur R. Johnson, the army investigator who exposed the alleged guard defalcations, was demoted to the position of a workman.

Yesterday's developments included a report that Lieut. Col. C. L. Corbin, commander of the quartermaster depot, 1918 West Pershing road, told Johnson before the indictment of Col. Charles J. Kraft, in charge of the Broadway armory, that Johnson could choose between "letting that Kraft case alone" and submitting his resignation.

Rumor Other Assertion.

Col. Corbin also is reported to have made this assertion to Johnson during the same conversation:

"The state officials [presumably Illinois National Guard officials] are indignant about your investigation of this case. Gen. Parker [commander of the 6th corps area] also has asked me to take you off."

Reached at Springfield yesterday, Maj. Gen. Parker said:

"I didn't say anything to Col. Corbin about Johnson or about the Kraft case. I had nothing to do with it. Johnson was an employé of the quartermaster corps, under Col. Corbin, and that department is under the quartermaster general at Washington."

Col. Corbin Denies Reports.

Col. Corbin categorically denied the reports that he told Johnson to quit the Kraft case or his job and that state officials were indignant over the investigation.

"The only thing I told him," said Col. Corbin, "was that he was needed to take an inventory of property in the quartermaster depot. I told him Gen. Parker had said he would be returned to his regular department upon completion of the Kraft case."

Col. Corbin explained that Johnson's regular position was superintendent of labor, and that he was assigned to Gen. Parker for the purpose of conducting investigations. For thirteen years according to federal authorities, Johnson has done nothing but conduct investigations, and following the return of the Kraft indictment he was assigned to duty in the basement of the quartermaster depot, checking property. He then took a leave of absence and is seeking a position in another branch of federal service.

Placed Under Subpoena.

Persistent reports in official circles, since the Kraft indictment, have stated that Illinois National Guard officials exerted pressure to obtain the removal of Johnson from the fraud case. It is of record that United States Attorney Johnson was forced to put the investigator under subpœna during the last twenty days of the inquiry to prevent his removal.

It is regarded as significant in federal circles that no state criminal action was taken in the Kraft case, although the state loss of funds is alleged to have equaled the federal peculations—$100,000 in each case. The only action taken by the Illinois National Guard was the calling of a board of inquiry, which permitted Kraft to resign with his rank.

Maj. Gen. Roy D. Keehn, commander of the 33d division, or Illinois National Guard, has announced that no court martial would be called.

Investigator Wins Praise.

United States Attorney Johnson was asked yesterday whether his office would investigate the demotion of Johnson and the reports that guard leaders were responsible.

"I have no authority," said Mr. Johnson. "If there is an investigation it will have to be conducted by the war department." Mr. Johnson praised the work of the investigator on the Kraft case, as did the assistant prosecutor, James C. Leaton, who presented the case to the grand jury. Mr. Leaton said yesterday he understood "the state officials obtained the shelving of Johnson," which he termed "outrageous."

How Illinois National Guard officials might influence the regular army officers to "put Johnson in a cage" was the subject of speculation among federal authorities yesterday. One of them, a veteran of the world war, expressed the opinion that social opportunities constituted a possible explanation.

Explains "Social Inducement.

"Regular army officers are impressed by wealth and social standing," said this official. "A man with these assets is able to offer opportunities for advancement socially to the army officers, and this is likely to be considered an inducement."

Maj. Gen. Keehn, a Chicago lawyer, was appointed commander of the Illinois National Guard by Gov. Small in February, 1927. He had previously served in the guard as a judge advocate, with the rank of lieutenant colonel. Prior to that his military experience consisted of military training at the De Pauw university preparatory school, the organization of a militia company at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, which was not mustered into service, and service in the world war as a judge advocate in New York.

The Kraft case is not the only Illinois National Guard scandal of the last three years. In the fall of 1927, Capt. J. Leland Bass, quartermaster corps, United States army, was tried by a court martial on charges of mishandling confiscated alcohol and liquors at the government warehouse on Pershing road. The evidence showed that 40,000 gallons of the alcohol was trucked to the Broadway armory.

Indict Other Officers.

Col. Otis B. Duncan, colored, former commander of the 8th regiment of the guard, was recently released from jail after serving four months for embezzlement. He still is awaiting trial in the federal court on a conspiracy charge. The defalcations in this case were alleged to have exceeded $45,000.

Last June five men were indicted by the government at Springfield charged with conspiracy to abstract $25,000 in federal property alone and to embezzle several more thousands of dollads by padding drill pay rolls. In addition to these charges they were accused of selling seven government owned horses. The men are Capt. Schontz, Lieut. Crookston, and Lieut. Plaisted of the 106th cavalry, and two Schaeffer brothers, feed store dealers. The indictment charges the guard officers with selling army hay and oats to the feed store dealers.

In the Kraft case the alleged method of swindling the government and state was the padding of pay rolls and the employment of battery mechanics of the 202d coast artillery on government funds to do private work for Col. Kraft.

ARE you one of the thousands of people who have Night Nerves? Do you sleep fitfully—toss and turn all night long and wake up feeling miserable? If you do, you know what a sad thing "Night Nerves" really is!

Fortunately, this inability to get sound relaxed sleep is usually caused by no more than an imperfect mattress. One with hollows and bumps—uneven sagging surfaces that irritate and waken you the minute you begin to doze off. Now an utterly new kind of inner-spring mattress is offered—one that makes sound sleep easy and natural.

A New "COBWEB" spring principle

Unlike the early type inner-spring mattress, Vanity Fair provides complete support for your entire body. A new kind of pillowy suspension.

Adjusts itself to your individual weight. You do not sink down or "hit bottom" on Vanity Fair. You are buoyed up. Literally "float" on the new "COBWEB" spring construction.

The result is perfect relaxation. Sleep follows naturally and swiftly. In the morning you awake completely refreshed—full of pep, eagerness.

Light weight—smart appearance

Vanity Fair is from 15 to 20 pounds lighter in weight than the old-type inner-spring mattress. Any woman can turn it easily.

The new "COBWEB" construction provides far greater strength, too! Laboratory tests equal to many years of normal wear, show it to be 50% stronger—more durable.

One of the country's foremost designers created a special fabric covering for Vanity Fair. You may have it in Beige, Jade Green, or Orchid shades, exquisitely finished and decorated.

Vanity Fair's fine needlework, rivaling that of years ago, will delight you. The roll edges are beautifully taped. Sides are "biscuit-quilted" for additional smartness.

Special Air Windows, scientifically placed, assure perfect ventilation inside.

The cost of Vanity Fair reflects the current downward trend in commodity prices—It is amazingly low—only $35.75. Go to any of these stores today. Ask for it by name. Inspect it as carefully as you wish. If you are not delighted with the super value it offers, you will not be asked to buy.

WOMAN'S DERBY STARTS AIR RACE PROGRAM TODAY

Girl Flyers to Hop from Pacific Coast.

BY ROBERT WOOD.

Today the great migration of flying craft starts toward Chicago. From every metropolitan airport in the country and from remote cow pasture flying fields airmen will take off, set their compasses for Curtiss airport, and fly on to the tournament of the air.

For a week the concentration of the nation's flying machines and flying men will continue, and by next Saturday a thousand planes are expected to be roosting at Curtiss field and in the hangars of a dozen Chicago airports, ready to take the air and fly for honors and prizes in the 1930 national air races. The races open next Saturday.

Women Start Derby Today.

Girl pilots flying in the Pacific woman's Derby will start the movement toward Chicago. Last night at Long Beach, Cal., they were grooming their planes for the takeoff at 3:30 (Pacific standard time) this afternoon, or 6:30 Chicago time.

At that hour, Maj. R. W. Schroeder contest director for the races, will stand before a microphone, pistol in hand, and fire the starting shot that will be carried by radio network to Long Beach, where fifteen small open planes will be marshalled on the starting line.

The remote signal will start the first plane on the first lap of the 2,365 mile race over the San Bernardino mountains, across the Yuma desert, and the western plains to Chicago. These women pilots—high school girls, debutantes, mothers, wives of flyers—will fly three or four hundred miles each day making 17 stops for fuel and rest before they land before the crowds at Curtiss field on the afternoon of Aug. 25, the third day of the ten day race meet. National fame and $22,000 in prize money will await the victors.

Other Entries Received.

With last minute entries in this derby anticipated, the official list of flyers last night included the following: Gladys O'Donnell, winner of second place in last year's derby from Santa Monica to Cleveland; Margery Doig of Danbury, Conn.; Ruth Barron of Hollywood; Mrs. Mildred Morgan of Beverly Hills, Cal.; Claire Fahy of Los Angeles; Ruth Stewart of St. Louis, and Jean La Rene of Kansas City.

Art Goebel, winner of the Dole prize for his flight to Hawaii and former holder of several transcontinental speed records, got in under the line with his entry in the nonstop race from Los Angeles, which will finish here on Aug. 27. Another was Wiley Post, flying a Wasp Lockheed Vega.

Post will not land after his 1,700 mile dash to Chicago. He informed race officials yesterday that he will cross the finish line and continue on to New York without stopping. Over Curtiss field he will refuel for the New York hop.

Byrd to Be Honored.

The Chicago chapter of the National Aëronautical association yesterday announced that Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd will be presented a diploma of honorary membership in the association at the N. A. A. inaugural banquet at the Sherman hotel Friday evening. Byrd will be the fifth to receive the diploma, the others being Dr. Hugo Eckener, Thomas A. Edison, Col. Lindbergh, and Orville Wright.

Europe's Crack Flyers Arrive for Air Races

BY TOM PETTEY.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Five European aces arrived on the Leviathan today bound for Chicago and the air races. They were accompanied by Lieut. "Al" Williams, former crack navy flyer, who went to Europe to invite them to the national air meet.

Described by aeronautical men as the "greatest group of crack speed pilots in the world," the representatives of four foreign nations will fly to Chicago Wednesday escorted by a number of commercial ships. Tuesday they will call on President Hoover.

The flyers are Flying Officer R. L. Atcherley, British Schneider cup racer, and Lieut. Robert Preston of the Cold Stream Guards, pilots assigned to the royal family; Pietro Colombo of Italy's first pursuit squadron; Marcel Doret of France and Capt. Fritz Loose of Germany.

Will Demonstrate Planes.

A city welcome was accorded the group as representing a return courtesy of the aeronautical ambassadorship begun by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, Clarence Chamberlin, Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd and the latest unofficial aviation ambassador, Lieut. Williams.

The men who are internationally known racing and aerobatic pilots do not plan to take part in any of the races although they have their government's permission, but will demonstrate the latest planes and maneuvers of Europe at the air meet.

Stowed below deck on the Leviathan was a special Blackburn Lincock pursuit plane for Flying Officer Atcherley in which he hopes to execute a series of daring aerobatic feats.

Marcel Doret, the French airman, brought his De Woitine single seater fighting monoplane, which he will put through the French school of aerobatics. The Italian Breda plane which is powered with Wright motor will be flown by Colombo. It is on another steamship. The British flyers will have English type planes. Loose will fly a Junkers.

All of the ships that arrived today were transferred to the Pennsylvania freight depot for shipment to Chicago where they will be assembled and tuned for the opening of the air races.

The men did not bring their racing type planes, but in view of the fact they are the first foreign flyers with diplomatic sanction, aviation officials here predicted the beginning of international racing in America in future years.

At the Chicago races Williams, the American flyer, will use a Curtiss Hawk, he said today. The ship is being specially built for him and will be powered with a Bliss-Jupiter engine, giving it 100 more horse power than the one in which he staged his spectacular demonstrations of inverted flying in the navy.

Flew in Three Wars.

Atcherley, the British flyer, said this afternoon it was problematical whether the Schneider races would be held again, but that he believed "some sort of speed races would be held in Europe and a speed of 380 miles an hour reached."

Loose, the German, has flown in three wars. He flew in the North sea sector for Germany, took part in Riff uprising and was in China with the nationalist forces.

Peter F. Brady, chairman of the mayor's welcoming committee, and James A. Talbot, who backed Williams' trip to invite the flyers to the Chicago meet, had charge of the welcoming arrangements here today.

WOMAN "TRUNK MURDER" VICTIM.

Des Plaines street police yesterday were investigating the murder of a young Mexican woman, whose body was found in a trunk in a rooming house at 1517 South Halsted street. She had been slain by a long dagger, which lay at her feet. She was not identified.

MAN'S ARREST FOR MURDER RECALLS HALL-MILLS CASE

New York, Aug. 16.—[Special.]—A ghost of the Hall-Mills murder case rose in another Jersey killing today when police in Madison township arrested Herman Menzel, 54 year old farmer, on a charge of the murder of Rose Muttner, 47, his housekeeper and a former maid to Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall.

Menzel and the woman quarreled, police declared, and he struck her with a sickle. Then he walked to the state police station, they say, reported the crime and surrendered. At a New Brunswick hospital physicians said the woman had died almost instantly.

The woman entered Mrs. Hall's employ shortly after the acquittal of the clergyman's widow and her two brothers for the murder of the Rev. Edward W. Hall and his choir singer, Eleanor Mills, in 1926.

The pair called at the register office today, where Mr. Field signed the application and Mrs. Coats confirmed it. They gave their ages as 35 and 28, respectively. U. S. TO RELEASE ROAD FUNDS FOR DROUGHT RELIEF possibly $50,000,000. The money will be loaned at low interest rates to members of the association. White House reports yesterday were that 500,000 cattle and 2 to 3 million sheep will need to be moved from Montana to Colorado and Nebraska, where feed is available.

Loans Are Arranged for Stockmen, Too.

The farm board loan was announced following several conferences between C. B. Denman, live stock member of the board, and Gov. John Erickson of Montana, who remained here after the President's conference.

Little Forced Marketing.

"Little evidence of force marketing of live stock because of the drought," was shown by the bureau of agricultural economics reports received from its representatives at 18 of the leading live stock markets.

"In many cases," said the bureau's statement announcing the survey results, "stockmen are holding back stock that might now go to market if prices were more favorable."

Receipts of cattle at all public markets in July were 13 per cent smaller than in July, 1929, and 17 per cent below the five year average, the survey disclosed. Market receipts of hogs in July were 12 per cent less than in July a year ago and for the first seven months of the year federally inspected slaughter of hogs was 7.5 per cent smaller than in the same period last year. Sheep and lamb marketings have been larger, however, owing to expansion of sheep production in recent years."

Through the special feed inquiry undertaken today the department of agriculture hopes to obtain more complete information regarding the needs of farmers in the drought area and the possible sources of supplies to meet the deficiency from other areas.

Girl Is Accused as Aid in Bomb Murder in Bank

Fort Worth, Tex., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Miss Gladys Milam, 21, today was charged of being an accomplice to murder, in connection with the bombing of the Stockyards National bank by N. M. Martin, who first demanded $10,000. Martin and Fred L. Pelton, vice president of the bank, were killed. The complaint against the woman charged that "on Aug. 7, prior to the commission of the offense, she did wilfully and with malice aforethought; advise, command and encourage Martin to the commission of the offense."

HELD ON BOGUS CHECK CHARGE.

Joseph Kalaniski, alias Joseph Novak, 30 years old, 5634 Merrimac avenue, was arrested by the West North avenue police yesterday on a charge of trying to pass a bogus $85 check at the Noel State bank.

LARAMIE STATE BANK CLOSED BY AUDITOR NELSON

The Laramie State bank, 5200 Chicago avenue, was closed for examination by order of State Auditor Oscar Nelson last evening at request of the board of directors following heavy withdrawals by depositors during the day. Frozen assets and depleted cash reserves account for the closing, according to the auditor's office.

Indicements charging embezzlement were returned on Thursday against Carl A. Mueller, former president of the bank; Alfred Brucker, former cashier; Julius B. Matthews, former assistant cashier, and Miss Anna E. Watkins, former clerk of the safety vault division of the bank. Since Mueller's resignation as president, O. E. Schmidt, executive vice president, has been in control. John P. Garner is chairman of the board. The bank was capitalized for $200,000, has a listed surplus of $25,000, and deposits of $350,000.

The Chicago Trust company yesterday was named as receiver for the Roosevelt Bankers State bank, 400 East 47th street, and the Citizens Trust and Savings bank, 6 West Garfield boulevard. Depositors' committees of both banks have appointed Sheridan Bruseaux, former chief investigator for Frank J. Loesch, to examine circumstances surrounding the closing of the institutions.

COMMUNIST IS FINED $5.

Walter Stollberg, 29 years old, 737 Buckingham place, a communist, was fined $5 yesterday by Judge John H. Lyle in Town Hall court for resisting an officer, and then ordered held for investigation by immigration officers.

TRAIN PLOWS INTO CROWD; 12 KILLED, 45 MORE MAY DIE

[Copyright: 1930: By the New York Times.]

VIENNA, Aug. 16.—The Belgrade-Zagreb express crashed full speed into a crowd of people watching the fireworks display in connection with a religious festival just outside Zagreb tonight. Twelve men and women were killed and forty-five were so seriously injured that they may succumb. To get a better view of the fireworks spectacle, hundreds of peasants had clambered on the track and were so absorbed in watching the exploding rockets that the train approaching around a curve was not heard. In a mad panic to escape some actually ran into the engine.

STATE TO BUILD MORE ROADS AS DROUGHT RELIEF

Work Will Be Done in Stricken Areas.

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Anxious to do his utmost to relieve unemployment and the consequent financial distress, which has been accentuated by the drought, Gov. Louis L. Emmerson today directed state highway officials to place under contract for this year $4,000,000 of road work that was to have been constructed in 1931.

Most of the new work will be distributed, in so far as possible, through the southern and central portions of the state, which have been hardest hit by the prolonged lack of rainfall.

Director H. H. Cleaveland of the department of public works and buildings and Chief Highway Engineer Frank T. Sheets will advertise immediately for bids on the additional work so that there will be no delay in placing the projects under contract.

Insist on Local Labor.

As originally planned, the 1930 road program was to total approximately $32,500,000, including roads under contract, and those on which bids have been received. The new work will increase this amount to more than $37,000,600. Many of the road projects already under contract for this year are located in the drought stricken areas of the state.

In contracting for the $4,000,000 additional work, the department will insist, as it has in awarding other contracts this year, that the contractors, in so far as practicable, employ Illinois labor in the localities where the work is to be done. Also the department is insisting that the contractors include a fair scale of wages in their bids on this work.

Metropolitan Area Projects.

Gov. Emmerson designated the construction of a total of 159.12 miles of which 27.42 is in the metropolitan area of Chicago.

The work to be done in the metropolitan area follows:

Route 6, section 14-R, Boone county, .4 miles; paving east of Belvidere road, eighteen feet wide.

Route 18, section 78, Cook county, bridge over Des Plaines river at Lyons.

Route 18, section 8-YX, .75 miles; paving in La Grange, widening to forty feet.

Route 19, section 70-A-2, Cook county, 2.9 miles, grading between Barrington to Baldwin road; highway grade separation Dundee road at Barrington.

Route, 19, section 86-YB, widening bridge over Des Plaines river at Des Plaines.

Route 49, section 144-X, 1.8 miles, Cook county, paving 171st street to 185th street, forty feet.

Route 49, section 144-H, grade separation at Homewood, Cook county.

Route 49, section 146, Cook county, 3 miles; paving 123d street to 147th street, twenty and forty feet wide.

Route 53, section 534, Will and Du Page counties, 8 miles; paving Lisle to route 4; new twenty foot bridge over Illinois-Michigan canal at Lockport.

Route 55, section 551-X-1, Cook county, 10 miles; paving north of Riverside, twenty feet wide.

Route 60, section 118-X, Lake county, two miles; paving route 59 to Fox Lake, eighteen feet.

Bridge Over Fox River.

Route 62, section 1158, McHenry county, bridge over Fox river at Algonquin.

Route 63, section 631-X, Cook county, 1.07 miles; paving east approach E. J. and E. overhead near Barrington.

Route 66, section 121, Will county, 9.02 miles; paving Plainfield to route No. 4.

Route 49, section 143-VC, Will county, overhead bridge at Monee.

Route 49, section 125-VA, Marshall county, .60 miles, heading approaches to Santa Fé at Larose.

Route 91, section 108-X, Peoria county, 3.3 miles; paving route 78 west.

Route 99, section 1058, C. McDonough county, bridge south of Colmar.

Gov. Emmerson also called a conference of all state officials and members of his cabinet to lay before them the drought relief plans decided upon in Washington. He is expected to announce the appointment of a committee that will have full charge of the drought relief activities in Illinois. Membership of the committee will include outstanding representatives of the financial, industrial, and agricultural groups of Illinois.

Road Building Costs U. S. $4,643,351,000 in 11 Years

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Road building has become the leading item of expenditures by the federal government, according to the survey on the planning and control of public works issued today by the committee on recent economic changes of President Hoover's unemployment conference.

From a level of only $3,752,750 spent by the department of agriculture on federal highways in 1919 the outlays on that account were shown to have risen to an average of more than $90,000,000 in the last five years. A total of $101,212,185 was spent by the federal government on new road construction last year.

During the last eleven years new construction by the various federal departments aggregated $3,280,065,000 while repairs and maintenance during the same period amounted to $763,286,000, making a grand total for all additional construction during the period of $4,043,351,000.

Expenditures on new construction by the federal government were less last year than they were in 1919, 1920, 1921, and 1922, figures in the survey disclosed, due to the high level of construction for military and naval equipment after the close of the war. For new construction more than $716,000,000 was spent in 1919, the peak year, of which nearly $459,000,000 was expended by the navy department alone.

New federal government construction last year cost $266,149,000, repairs and maintenance aggregating $86,287,000, making a total expenditure of $352,436,000, the highest level since 1921.

Federal government funds for construction are dispensed mainly in connection with the following: Inland waterways, irrigation and flood control projects in the west, maintenance of channels at ocean ports, river and harbor improvement, the ten year building program for postoffices and other federal buildings throughout the country, floating and land equipment of the navy, army posts, road systems in national parks and forest, veterans' bureau hospitals, federal penitentiaries, custom houses, immigration stations, Indian schools, the Alaskan railway, the Panama canal and the public works of the District of Columbia.

Cost of Improvements.

New buildings and ground improvement costs last year were $45,537,094; drainage, irrigation, power, water and dams, $29,726,305; floating equipment, $50,221,130; waterways and water front improvements, $31,294,407; miscellaneous, $8,158,301.

For the whole 1919-1929 period, new buildings and ground improvement costs were $656,603,167; roads, $881,971,767; drainage, irrigation, power, dams, etc., $285,266,381; floating equipment, $1,119,431,730; waterways and water front improvements, $295,025,527; miscellaneous, $41,766,155.

LUCAS PREDICTS G. O. P. WILL WIN FALL ELECTIONS

Counterattack Is Made by Democrats.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Confidence that the country will return a congress loyal to President Hoover in the elections this fall was expressed by Robert H. Lucas, new director of the executive committee of the Republican national committee, in delivering his first broadside after taking office today.

In firing his opening gun, Mr. Lucas charged that the Democrats were seeking to use the serious business depression, which he termed a "tragic situation," for political purposes in an effort to gain a political victory. He asserted that in their campaign Democratic managers are speaking with great political satisfaction of the "stock market crash, the business depression, and the unemployment situation."

Democrats Deny Charges.

A lively controversy in political circles was precipitated by the Lucas statement, which had scarcely been published before Democratic spokesmen delivered a counter attack in an attempt to refute the charges made by the Republican executive director. The assertion was also made that the chances are at least even for the Democrats to organize and control the United States senate after the November elections.

Senators Millard E. Tydings [Dem., Md.] and William H. King [Dem., Utah] outlined the Democratic positions. Senator King denied vehemently that the Democratic party had in any way sought to oppose the efforts of the President to restore business normalcy or had unfairly made political capital out of existing economic conditions.

In a forecast of the political situation Senator Tydings listed as doubtful states Colorado, Massacusetts, Kentucky, West Virginia, Rhode Island, Wyoming, and South Dakota, in all of which Republican senators come up for election this year. He also stated that the Democrats have a fighting chance to win senate seats in Illinois, Kansas, Iowa, New Hampshire, and Ohio. Anything may happen in Pennsylvania, Senator Tydings added.

Confident of Control.

"There are thirty-five senatorial contests," Mr. Tydings said, "and the winning of ten of them by the Democrats means control of the senate. At this time there are 56 Republicans, 39 Democrats, and one Farmer-Laborite in the senate."

Director Lucas resigned from his former post of commissioner of internal revenue yesterday and opened up his new offices at Republican national headquarters today. Like Jouett Shouse, chairman of the Democratic national executive committee and its principal spokesman, Mr. Lucas comes from Kentucky.

"I believe," Mr. Lucas said, "we realize the past year has brought our party in the nation face to face with a new situation.

Charges Democrats Unfair.

"Following eight years of unusual prosperity, we are now confronted with a business depression, temporary, perhaps, but nevertheless serious, resulting in considerable unemployment. While this tragic situation is worldwide and far more critical in all other countries than in the United States, the Democratic party managers are taking advantage of it for political purposes.

"They speak today, with great political satisfaction, of the stock market crash, the business depression and the unemployment. They fervently hope that through this national misfortune their party may be returned to power. In a campaign of misrepresentation and confusing propaganda they expect to gain a political victory through the misery and misfortune of their fellow men.

"The Republican party organization has served the country well in the past. No greater public service was ever performed for any people than the service rendered by the Republican party in the presidential election of 1928. An even greater service is to be rendered in the coming election.

"If by reason of this situation the Democratic party—traditionally known as 'the free trade party' and 'the party of unrestricted immigration'—should gain control of the legislative branch of the federal government, what chance would there be for a restoration of normal business? What chance would there be to create employment for all our people? What chance to make a market for the products of the farm? Elect a Democratic congress in 1930 and this country will not see normal business again for some years to come."

Brown Raps Pinchot During Pennsylvania G. O. P. Picnic

Fogelsville, Pa., Aug. 16.—(AP)—The bitterness which marked the primary campaign of the Republican party in Pennsylvania between the Brown and Pinchot camps was renewed here today at the annual picnic of the Republican party. In other years this picnic has marked the firing of the opening gun in state-wide campaigns for the final election.

Francis Shunk Brown, gubernatorial candidate, who was apparently defeated by Gifford Pinchot in the Republican party in face of official returns, directed an attack on the former governor when he followed him to the platform.

Resents Pinchot's Speech.

Pinchot in his speech had reiterated his stand for clean elections and promised that if elected in November he would seek to have the legislature pass effective clean election bills.

"Before this campaign never did any one dare to cast aspersions on my character," Brown said. "Any one who does is without honor and without shame. The gentleman who preceded me took a dig at my native city of Philadelphia, charging crooked elections. I am sorry to dig into these personalities, but the gentleman who preceded me has attacked my native city and I cannot sit idly by without defending her.

"One hundred thousand votes were taken from me in the north side of Pittsburgh. This is a wet district and the votes were purchased with money, but it was not my money. Put that in your pipes and smoke it."

Nomination in Courts.

In the opening speech of the program State Chairman Edward Martin said that Gifford Pinchot was the nominee of the party until the courts should rule that another had been the duly elected candidate for the governorship on the Republican ticket.

This uncertainty concerning the gubernatorial candidate resulted this year in the state committee making the annual gathering here more of a reunion than the actual initiation of the state-wide campaign for the November election.

Sea Race to Bring Dates to U. S. Ready for Start

BASRA, Iraq, Aug. 16.—All preparations are being made for a trans-Atlantic race to put the first dates of the season on the American markets. As soon as the ships are filled, the rush to clear their cargoes will begin.

The annual harvest is worth nearly $10,000,000 to Basra. Armed guards are kept on duty in the date gardens and there have been many shootings because of thieves.

ROB OIL STATION; GET $21.

Logansport, Ind., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Four daylight bandits obtained $21 in a filling station holdup here today. Henry Muckenfuss, 20, was the victim.

Dry Agents Raid Large Brewery of Aiello Gang

A large brewery, said to have been operated by the Aiello north side gang, was raided by prohibition agents at 4714 Walton place yesterday. The raiders found eight 2,000 galloon beer mash vats, seven of them full, and forty barrels of beer ready for removal. The plant, located in a one story brick garage, was operated by two electric motors. No prisoners were taken.

MRS. M'CORMICK VICTORY CERTAIN, DECLARES MOSES

Senatorial Campaign Head Visits Illinois.

BY PARKE BROWN.

Starting a tour of states that have contests this year, United States Senator George H. Moses, chairman of the national Republican senatorial campaign committee, looked over the situation in Illinois yesterday and pronounced it good.

The New Hampshire senator consulted with State Chairman C. J. Doyle and other leaders during the morning and in a statement to the press in the afternoon predicted unqualifiedly that Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick will be the next United States senator from Illinois.

His prophecy concerning the national field was that the party division in the next senate will be just about the same as the present lineup—that while the Republicans may lose a seat here or there they will gain others to make up the losses. He said there was Republican confidence throughout the country as a whole and that apprehension existed in reference to only a few states.

"No Doubt About Illinois."

"But," he added quickly, "there is no apprehension whatever about Illinois.

"We are as certain as any one can be about anything that is in the future that Ruth Hanna McCormick will be elected.

"And I refuse to be alarmed about any assertion, no matter from what source, that she will not be seated. She and Jim Davis of Pennsylvania will both be elected and will both be seated.

"The constitution is again coming into its own; and a senator-elect possessing a certificate in proper form and known to be the person named in it is not going to be denied the right to take the oath of office."

Senator Moses, having come to Chicago from his home at Concord, will continue on westward today, probably going first to Denver and then possibly on to Cheyenne.

Consider State Platforms.

His visit here came just as state leaders in both camps were preparing to get busy on their platforms for their state conventions at Springfield. The Democratic gathering will be held on Wednesday, the Republican on Friday, and in between—on Thursday—comes "Governor's day" at the state fair which probably will determine the Republican official attitude toward prohibition.

That is about the only bone of contention in the state G. O. P. just as it is, to a lesser extent, in the Democratic organization. But new light in reference to the latter was provided during the day by a statement from James Hamilton Lewis, senatorial nominee, concerning his wishes in connection with the platform.

Proposes State Rule.

After reasserting that repeal of the Volstead act and the eighteenth amendment is unnecessary he proposed as a first declaration of the platform:

"A demand that government be brought back to the principle on which our states are established of legislative home rule by state, county or city in any law that directs the tastes, habits, food or drink, schooling or religion of the citizen where such is to be guided or controlled by the law, other than that of religion and conscience."

There are only two main items of business on the convention programs. Greater importance is given to the adoption of platforms. But there is general interest also in the nomination of four candidates for trustees of the University of Illinois.

Recommended by Alumni.

In years past the proposals of the alumni association of the university have had great weight with the conventions. This year two committees from that organization have presented complete slates for consideration.

The four proposed by the Republican committee of the alumni association are the following:

George A. Barr, Joliet; now president of the board.

E. E. Barrett, La Grange; president of the Roberts & Schaefer company, coal handling machinery; former president of the alumni association.

Mrs. Margaret D. Blake, Lake Forest; served as a trustee from 1919 to 1925; former head of the Chicago Equal Suffrage association.

Leonard A. Colp, Marion; attorney and master in chancery.

Those proposed by the Democratic committee are:

M. C. Zacharias, Chicago; president of the Midland State bank.

Mrs. Marjorie Robbins Hopkins, Chicago; wife of James M. Hopkins, president of the Campbell Railway Supply company.

C. A. Ewing, Decatur; banker and farm operator.

Walter W. Williams, Benton; lawyer and former state representative.

Ordinarily there are only three members of the university board to be nominated. This year there is an additional place to be filled because of the death of Mrs. Mary E. Busey.

Special trains will run from Chicago and other cities to the capital for both conventions. The Cook county Democrats predict they will have nearly 2,000 in their delegation.

OFFICIAL ILLINOIS POPULATION SET AT 7,607,684

State Gains 1,122,404 or 17.3 Pct. in 10 Years.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—The state of Illinois has 7,607,684 inhabitants, an increase of 1,122,404 or 17.3 per cent since 1920, the census bureau announced officially today. The state population ten years ago was 6,485,280.

Official figures for Chicago showed the 1930 population to be 3,375,329 as compared to 2,701,705 in 1920, an increase of 673,624 or 24.9 per cent.

59 Counties Lose!

Du Page led all of the other 102 counties in the state by a wide margin in its percentage of growth, rising from 42,120 to 85,388 or 102.7 per cent. Lake county took second place with a growth of 39.2 per cent. Others in order were:

Madison, 33.9; Cook, 30.1; Winnebago, 30.1; Peoria, 26.8; Kane, 25.9; and Macon, 25.3.

One surprising feature of the Illinois report was the fact that 59 counties decreased in population. Practically all of these are located in the south half of the state.

Ten Largest Cities.

A list of the 10 largest cities in the state, outside of Chicago, their 1930 populations, increase and percentage of growth follows:

City—	1930.	Increase.	Pct.
Peoria	104,788	28,667	37.7
Rockford	85,831	20,180	30.7
East St. Louis	74,024	7,257	10.9
Springfield	71,857	12,674	21.4
Cicero	65,776	20,781	46.2
Oak Park	63,819	23,961	60.1
Evanston	61,766	24,532	65.9
Decatur	57,578	13,560	30.9
Berwyn	47,005	32,355	32.2
Aurora	46,568	10,171	27.9

Percentages of growth of the largest Chicago suburban towns not among the first ten were: Elgin, 30.8; Waukegan, 73.9; Maywood, 112.7; Blue Island, 44.5; Harvey, 77.8; Wilmette, 94.2; Forest Park, 35.1; Elmhurst, 195.6.

ITALY LAUNCHES FASTEST CRUISER IN WORLD TODAY

Is Specially Designed for War in Mediterranean.

BY DAVID DARRAH.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ROME, Aug. 16.—The Italian admiralty is slowly and steadily developing its post-Washington fleet in high speed light cruisers. At Sestri, near Genoa, tomorrow will be launched in the presence of port authorities and Fascist officials the 5,250 ton cruiser Alberico da Barbiano, sister ship of the cruisers Alberto di Giussano, and Giovani Delle Bande Nere, which were committed to the waters in last April's launching orgy.

The Bartolomeo Colleoni, the fourth of the light cruisers of the type in this group of six, lies about completed on the stocks in Genoa and will be launched shortly.

Most Powerful in World.

These four ships will give the Italian navy four of the fastest and most formidably armed light cruisers of any navy in the world. They are especially designed for the type of fighting which would likely take place in the Mediterranean, where speed counts far more than bulk and ponderous guns.

The Alberico da Barbiano and the others of this group are designed to make 37 knots, about 43 miles, an hour.

FRENCH ROW OVER ARMY

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Discontent in the war ministry and general staff over the limitation period of a compulsory military service to one year has flamed up stronger than ever, it was learned today, as a result of unsatisfactory maneuvers this week near Chalons-sur-Marne.

The exercises were marred by three accidents, two of which were fatal. According to the communist paper Humanite the maneuvers, which were scheduled to last 36 hours, were stopped in disgust by Gen. Gouraud after the 23d hour.

Two Soldiers Killed.

Military accidents, which have been quite frequent recently, reached a climax yesterday near Metz when two soldiers were instantly killed and six seriously shocked while loading a fallen airplane into a truck because they carelessly allowed the machine to touch a high tension wire.

The Left papers are using these accidents to make propaganda against military training, while army officials argue that it just proves the difficulty in developing efficient fighting units with such a brief period of service.

Minister of War Andre Maginot has refused to call off the great maneuvers in Lorraine in which 50,000 men will participate, despite a bad epidemic of infantile paralysis in the region. The Left papers are howling for a postponement of the maneuvers, or at least a transfer to some other district.

Sham War on Italian Border.

Preceding the Lorraine maneuvers by a few days will be the Alpine maneuvers at St. Jean de Maurienne, in which 50,000 men will likewise participate and on which the war ministry counts on working out a defense plan linking the already heavily fortified peaks on the Italian border.

Since experts estimate that three years will be required to complete the program of fortifications the French war board finds itself obliged to depend on mobile defense in unprotected areas. This defense will be motorized machine gun units, tanks, tractors, artillery, and the extensive use of cavalry.

PSYCHOLOGICAL TEST FOR ALL STUDENTS AT ILLINOIS UNIVERSITY

Urbana, Ill., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Psychological tests will be given all freshmen entering the University of Illinois this fall, it was announced today by Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase, who assumed the presidency of the state co-educational institution the first part of July. In making the announcement, the Illinois executive asked that the public be emphatically assured that such tests are not to be used to restrict admission in any manner. It was stated such tests are given each year by a number of other universities and colleges, but they have not previously been given at Illinois.

It is simply with the view of aiding the incoming students in their future university work that the tests will be undertaken, President Chase explained.

The tests will be given during the registration period in groups of from 200 to 250 by members of the staff of the department of psychology.

RUSSIAN CROWN JEWELS VIEWED BY U. S. SENATORS

MOSCOW, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Three United States senators, Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, Bronson Cutting of New Mexico, and Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky, today viewed the Russian crown jewels, the world's greatest single collection of gems, valued somewhere between $250,000,000 and $300,000,000.

The Americans, with a special party of tourists, saw the magnificent stones, in their royal settings, displayed at the state bank repository. They were strewn about on tables with not a single armed government sentry in sight.

Several apparently unarmed English speaking attendants mingled with the visitors. To all appearances the safety of the jewels, seized from the Romanoffs in the revolution, was in the keeping as much of the visitors themselves as of the harmless looking Russian guides.

The three senators first were given half an hour alone with the jewels, then the others, 27 in all, were admitted. The senators will next visit a soviet community farm.

GANDHI DEMANDS ALL INDIA VOTE ON BRITISH RULE

Sets Conditions for Round Table Conference.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Aug. 16.—It is understood that an Indian Nationalist letter delivered to Viceroy Lord Irwin after the discussions between Mahatma Gandhi and other jailed leaders demands that the British agree to a fixed period of transitional government to be terminated by a referendum in which the people would choose between dominion status or complete independence. They insist on these terms before agreeing to take part in the round table conference to be held next October.

The contents of the letter have already been made known in London. The British government in a reply to Lord Irwin will fix a date for an interview between the viceroy and the Nationalist leaders and will determine what answer he will make to Gandhi's terms so as to establish a basis for his participation in the round table conference.

Extremists Force Gandhi.

Indian sources here told THE TRIBUNE that the letter is a compromise between the milder views of Gandhi and the extremists' demands voiced by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, who held out for days for the right to demand immediate liberation from British rule.

Only Gandhi's pledge that the transitional British government would not mean a compromise in the struggle for ultimate freedom persuaded the younger elements of the Nationalist party to relent.

The letter does not attempt to establish the length of the temporary government's existence, but is a skeleton platform which the Nationalists will be willing to accept before calling off the passive resistance campaign. The details of the proposed transitional government, the date for its termination, and the plebiscite for popular choice between dominion status and absolute independence is left for the round table conference to decide.

DUCE MAKES JOBS FOR 13,000 ON MILITARY WORKS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ROME, Aug. 16—Further plans against winter unemployment were announced today by Premier Mussolini, who has taken personal direction of internal immigration and unemployment. These involve an expenditure of $13,350,000 in addition to the $50,000,000 announced last week.

The money will be charged against the budget of the war ministry and will be expended in building military barracks, improving of old ones, and building railroads. The work will be done in frontier provinces such as those Piedmont and Venice. The military work contemplated will give employment to 13,000 men for two years.

In addition to the above it was announced today that the reclamation and irrigation schemes planned throughout Italy will begin in October. These will employ 86,000 men, while 52,000 more will be put on road repairs throughout the winter.

MEXICO OKAYS $500,000,000 DEBT MERGER

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 16.—(AP)—An official statement issued today following a cabinet meeting said the Mexican government has approved the debt settlement reached in New York last month between Montes De Oca, finance minister, and a committee of international bankers.

The cabinet considered that Mexico had obtained advantages, the statement added. The agreement must be ratified by congress before it becomes effective, however.

The settlement provided for consolidation of the $500,000,000 debt of the Mexican government and the Mexican National railways. It followed the precedent of recent European debt agreements, being based on the principle of capacity to pay, calling for reduction of the amounts due for arrears of interest, and extending the term of payment to forty-five years.

CATHOLIC WOMEN MEET TO PLAN NEW FEDERATION

Groups Totaling 200,000 to Join Organization.

Representatives of organizations of Catholic women with a total membership estimated at 200,000 gathered yesterday at the Stevens hotel preliminary to completing a federation under the auspices of the Chicago archdiocese. The Rt. Rev. Barnard J. Shiel, auxiliary bishop of Chicago, set forth the aims and purposes of the proposed league to the nearly 200 delegates present.

Actual formation of the federation will take place during September, at a meeting to be called by the Rev. T. F. Rowan, one of the editors of the New World, official organ of the diocese. Father Rowan was responsible for the advance work of making contacts with the various organizations and obtaining the large attendance to determine the sentiment toward the project, which was found to be overwhelmingly favorable.

Promise to Coöperate.

Mrs. George V. McIntyre, president of the Big Sisters, presided at yesterday's meeting and introduced the presidents of many large Catholic clubs and societies, all of whom pledged the coöperation of their memberships. Among the organizations whose presidents responded were the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, Women's Catholic Order of Foresters, Ladies' auxiliary of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, Ladies of Isabella, Daughters of Isabella, Catholic Daughters of America, Catholic Women's league, Mercy federation, Illinois Club for Catholic Women, Ladies' Catholic Benevolent association, Glenola club, Ambrose club, the South Side and the Edgewater Catholic Women's clubs, and numerous others.

"There was never a time when the expression of Catholic thought and ideals was so necessary as it is today to counteract the influences that are undermining the little bit of religious belief that still is left in the minds and hearts of the mass of the people," Bishop Shiel told the women. "Only to contemplate the vast amount of good that it would be possible to accomplish through such a federation of Catholic women as is proposed, with each organization retaining its individuality but united under diocesan headquarters stuns the imagination."

Aims of Federation.

The aims of the federation will be to promote Catholic educational projects, social service, spiritual welfare, and to oppose legislation deemed inimical to the general welfare. Cardinal Mundelein has given his indorsement to the undertaking and has appointed Bishop Shiel to act as adviser to the members. Presidents of the larger organizations have been appointed members of the organization committee.

BEAUTY EXPERTS TO SETTLE FALL MAKEUP STYLES

Five thousand cosmeticians from all parts of the United States will meet tomorrow at the Hotel Sherman to settle the question of fall and winter styles in makeup. These are said to include orchid, amber and flamingo ensembles. An interesting feature also will be an exhibit of fur bathing suits.

It is the eleventh annual convention of the American Association of Cosmeticians and Hair Artists and will be in session three days. All problems affecting the beauty specialist will be discussed.

Subjects will include a discussion of the permanent removal of freckles by Dr. Alexander G. Ward, Chicago dermatologist. Hair shaping, eyelash tinting, and finger waving will be debated. The president of the association is Mrs. M. B. McGavran of Kansas City. Miss Frances Martell of Chicago is secretary.

CAMP ALGONQUIN TO HOLD EXHIBIT OF HAND WORK

Plan Tour for Visitors on Special Day.

Articles made by children during their two months in the undernourished section of Camp Algonquin, will be on display next Sunday. The exhibit will be held in the screened kindergarten. Mrs. Astrid Save, superintendent of the camp, will welcome all visitors and conduct them personally about the camp, assisted by the corps of counselors. Among the expected visitors are many who come every year just for the children's exhibit.

All this week the 200 boys and girls will put the final touches on reed baskets, hanging shelves, bird houses, boats, butterfly collections, flower collections, paintings, hand made dresses, embroidered towels, aprons for little sisters at home, and special gifts to be taken back to mother.

Gain Health at Camp.

Two months ago this group of children in poor health entered the camp. They do not appear undernourished now. Their bodies are tanned from repeated sunbaths and exposure to the sun and wind. They are heavier in weight and flabbiness has been replaced by muscle. And there is a marked change in their mental attitudes. They have gotten a grip on themselves, respect the rights of others, and have learned, in their informal association with one another, to think a bit more about the other person, and less about self.

This is evident in the letters of Mary, sent home to her mother, who lives on Maxwell street.

"I received your letter and was glad to hear from you," she wrote. "Tell Junior he must not fight, and I will be glad to wash the dishes when I come home. There are nice shade trees and we have all kinds of parties. I have a nice bed to sleep in. I have learned different songs of camp. There is a dispensary and a hospital, and there is no reason for people to be sick. I am going to the dentist and have my teeth pulled, and ask Louis if he can make me a sewing basket out of the roll of weavings that I brought home from school. I am coming home the last of August."

Gifts Are Received.

Camp Algonquin received $7.50 from the residents of the 200 block South Catherine avenue, La Grange, who also sent an equal amount for THE TRIBUNE free ice fund. Two little neighbor boys, George S. Rieg and George W. Lyon, in the 6600 block, Kimbark avenue, earned sixty cents for the camp at a lemonade stand. Miriam Fine, Union Pier, Mich., sent $2 for the ice fund, the earnings from getting advertisements for a children's magazine which she helped edit.

WHALE GIVES WANAMAKERS A THRILLING RIDE

Montauk Point, L. I., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—John Wanamaker Jr. and Mrs. Wanamaker are today resting on their houseboat at Montauk lake after two days of deep sea fishing and having been towed about for more than four hours by a 6,000 pound white finned whale.

The 25 foot long mammal harpooned by Capt. Charles Thompson, famous hunter of ocean game, is now on display in front of the Montauk Yacht club. From 10 o'clock in the morning until well after 2 yesterday afternoon the whale towed Capt. Thompson's fishing boat, a craft 50 feet long, for miles within a forty mile radius of Montauk Point.

While the wounded animal lashed the water the passengers, the crew of two, and the master of the ship looked on in awe, thrilled by the experience and not a little fearful that a lunge from the powerful tail of the monster would wreck their craft.

PARENTS REVEAL SECRET MARRIAGE OF ANN NOYES

Announcement of the marriage on March 22 of Miss Ann Noyes, 19 years old, daughter of Albert H. Noyes, president of Hills-McCanna company, to Charles A. Howe, son of Mrs. Charles D. Howe, real estate broker, was made yesterday by Mr. and Mrs. Noyes.

The young couple left yesterday for a belated honeymoon in the Wisconsin woods, and will make their home with the bride's parents, at 220 Linden street, Winnetka, on their return, Mr. Noyes said.

The marriage took place in Waukegan, according to Mr. Noyes. He did not know who performed the ceremony, he said. His daughter had been engaged to Mr. Howe, Mr. Noyes said, for the last year, known to a few friends. The marriage was an elopement, he said. He and Mrs. Noyes had known of it for some time.

New York, Aug. 16—[Special.]—The city's unemployed continued today to pour into the city's newly opened free employment agency. At noon, when the overworked registrars were permitted to rest until Monday, 2,400 jobless had registered and 120 unfortunates had obtained their first jobs in months and, in some cases, in years.

Figures for the two days the bureau has been functioning stood at 4,400 applicants and 200 jobs filled. There can be no estimate of the numbers who turned away in despair without filing applications.

"Shopping Bag" Robber Holds Up Store in Loop

A robber carrying a shopping bag entered the Red Robin hosiery shop at 13 West Washington street last night, held up the manager, Miss Rose Mednicow, 21 years old, 3556 Leland avenue, and two clerks, transferred $725 from the cash register to his bag and walked out. The clerks, Miss Rose Lorene, 19 years old, 3135 West 25th street, and Miss Anne Shirwo, 19, of 524 South Millard avenue, had just received their wages for the week. A WORD WITH THE IMPERIAL PRESS AGENT.

Great Britain got India when it got French Canada, and by the same method, fighting, and in the same conflict, the Seven Years War. It is still sitting nicely, if loosely or because loosely, over here, and is flailing about uncertainly, if not desperately, in India. If its position here is more than might be expected reasonably of time and circumstance, its position there certainly is not less.

British affairs in Canada have found their angle of repose. If anything slides down from the top it will find its place at the bottom, but in India the pyramid is upside down. If the top comes down there won't be any of the present bottom to be found. The British know that their enemies in other countries will take advantage of every bad break, and therefore one of their concerns is to keep on the right side of moral opinion whatever acts may be found necessary in handling the revolutionists.

It is a difficult undertaking. Repression by the British has filled the hospitals and provided a considerable casualty list, and aggression by the Hindus has violated objectionable law, but has not produced many instances of murderous assault. When the atrocities begin to get attention the British will have the explaining to do and the denials to make.

American opinion is regarded as important, although American moral interference has been virtually nothing and American government sympathy is, unofficially, apparent. Nevertheless there is complaint regarding the tone and prejudice of American published comment on the subject. The outstanding American book on India has been Miss Mayo's "Mother India," which would have prepared the American moralists for the extermination of the Hindus. It was almost an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in reverse; the British Little Eva in a bestial world. It brought forth some counter publications, the most widely circulated being from missionaries who had worked in India and protested against the consignment of the whole people to the low levels of degradation.

These books and some American journalism have aroused British critics to something bordering on an excitement of virtue. Self-deception is the father of the least detectable hypocrisy and therefore the best point of departure when the objective is public opinion. The London Times has given many columns to a protest against American mischief which reaches the rather heated conclusion that the British must abandon their tradition of suffering in silence and that the government must protest to the United States against the pollution of the well of truth.

This is not bright. It will cause laughter. It will lead to a little more examination of facts than Great Britain in its perplexities really requires. Great Britain has always been more adroit than any other nation in writing down its enemies. Its tradition of silent suffering covers a record of successful disparagement which already was old when Thomas Jefferson observed it with impatience and wrote his opinion of it. The governing class of England has worked for many generations with two doctrines, one of the inherent inferiority of other peoples who might become enemies, and the other of the abnormal ferocity and brutality of any people who did become an enemy.

To set this magnificent record of consistent and systematic belittling and horrifying aside as one of too much reticence or indifference or silent endurance of hurtful untruths is in itself magnificent, but it is too soon after 1914-1918 to try it. Americans who have been in touch with the products of British publicity know that wherever there is news of British origin concerning their own country it is poisoned. The news of America in London newspapers is mainly of the abnormalities, brutalities, and asininities of American political and social life. By British controlled news agencies it is thrown about the world until the world picture of the United States is one of a half savage people vulgarized by their money or brutalized by their superstitions and cruelties. The American protest against this is as old as Jefferson, and he in his day saw its purpose.

There is no prevailing unfriendliness here to Great Britain in the case of India. The government has given one proof of its sympathy, a surrender of potential sea power and the abandonment of control to the British. It is no secret that the American government regards the British position in India with more than amiable concern. Americans of any sense know that the British problem in India might be that of the United States in the Philippines. The British did not step in there yesterday, and with the most humane intentions they could not step out tomorrow. Generations bind each other, whether it is to good or evil. The United States is not dragging the imperial delinquent to the bar of world opinion, but it would be only common sense if that fact were recognized and a few others allowed to lie dormant.

GANGLAND YIELDS SOME EVIDENCE.

The safety deposit boxes of Zuta, the gangster and vice monger killed at a Wisconsin lake resort where he was in hiding from the killers, have yielded pay dirt. The full consequence of the evidence discovered is not yet fully apparent. The first revelations should gain importance as the deductions from them become clearer and more assured. The books of a gang of criminals are open.

This success has been obtained under State's Attorney Swanson by Roche, the chief investigator of the state's attorney's office, and by the special assistants, Rathbun and McShane, appointed for the investigation of the Lingle murder. When Lingle was murdered the special assignments were proposed to Mr. Swanson and agreed to by him to give this investigation the persistence and special purpose which evidently would be needed. It was intended in this way to stay on the trail of these gangland murderers. It was anticipated that it would be found a long, hard, and discouraging one. No other trails had been followed successfully. In a year of a hundred gang murders criminal justice had not found a satisfaction for one. That was a sufficient reason for the unparalleled boldness in murder which has given Chicago much of its reputation as the world capital of crime.

There was a chance that the Lingle murder could be made an exception to this intolerable rule of immunity. It had some different aspects from the other gang killings and because of them there was a fighting chance to make this the opportunity which, properly pressed, would give the looked for break through the protections vice, crime, and murder had relied upon as impregnable. Failure was a possibility and success could not be regarded as more than a probability, but it was determined to make the most of the chance and to stay at it with all the resources available. The pursuit was not to be a matter of a week, a month, or a year. The purpose of the investigators was to hang on.

Zuta was killed evidently because it was feared that he would prove to be a weak spot. Although he is dead he has become an eloquent witness to gang operations through the discovery of his carefully kept financial accounts, showing receipt and payment of money used in protecting the sources of criminal profits and taken in collecting from them.

No other investigation into a gang crime has had the success which has attended that of the Lingle murder. The gun which the killer used was identified, in spite of filed off numbers, and traced to its purchaser. He, Foster, was taken in California in spite of a tipoff which might have enabled him to escape. He was brought back to Chicago under indictment in spite of attempts to spring him, once in California and once here in Chicago. He is still in custody. The records of Zuta have been found with a wealth of material revealing the acts and methods of gang life, the incriminations of which are being studied.

Within the time elapsed since the murder these are much greater results in detection than reasonably could have been expected. The future consequences cannot be predicted, but where there was a closed trail there are now a hundred open ones, running into the connections of crime with politics, government, justice and the grafters who lived by murder and vice.

If persistence can be rewarded further it will be found that justice has just begun to fight.

OMERTA.

The difficulties of the police in fixing responsibility for crimes have for years included one special factor when the crimes took place among south Italians. This factor was the code brought to America from districts like Sicily and Naples where the Mafia and Camorra flourished. The keystone of this code is the "omerta." The word seems to be derived from a Sicilian word omu, man, and therefore implies manliness. Marion Crawford, whose novels of southern Italy were conspicuous thirty years ago and who lived for many years and died at Sorrento, describes the code as follows: "According to this code, a man who appeals to the law against his fellow man is not only a fool but a coward, and he who cannot take care of himself without the protection of the police is both. . It is reckoned as cowardly to betray an offender to justice, even though the offense be against oneself, as it would be not to avenge an injury by violence. It is regarded as dastardly and contemptible in a wounded man to betray the name of his assailant, because if he recovers he must naturally expect to take vengeance himself. A rhymed Sicilian proverb sums up this principle, the supposed speaker being one who has been stabbed: 'If I live, I will kill thee; if I die, I forgive thee.'"

The latter phrase of the saying is not to be relied upon, for it is the business of the victim's family to avenge him, and the code of silence does not forbid him to tell them the name of the assassin.

The code of omerta is not so strange a perversion of ethics as it seems outside of the region of its authority. The southern Italian was for centuries cruelly oppressed by successive alien tyrannies and never could look upon his government or its law as just or protective. They were the government and law of ruthless oppressors and so the oppressed evolved their own system of justice. It was not only bloody but it became also as corrupt as the government of the oppressor. The Mafia and Camorra were what we would call today rackets. They were organizations for profit through lawless violence and terrorism. They flourished for generations especially during the period of confusion brought about by the Napoleonic wars, and only within recent years have they been effectually crushed. But it was during these years when the Italian government was hunting them to earth that our immigration from the south of Italy was heaviest, and it was inevitable that this influx included many who found their native land getting too hot for them, as well as many more who, though not themselves criminals, had been bred in the moral atmosphere which supported the code from historic habit.

Of course, omerta has its chief support from justifiable fear of reprisal. Witnesses are terrorized and sometimes killed, but the code also derives some strength from the lack of ethical reaction against it among the people who brought it with them. This element of its strength will be gradually eliminated as Americanism takes place. But meanwhile omerta adds substantially to the difficulties of justice and must be recognized as a special factor in certain fields of crime.

AMERICAN HEROES

HENRY LEE

A Brief Review of His Contribution to Our Country.

(The articles of which the following is the thirteenth are intended as five minute sketches of early Americans of particular achievement and distinction, each flashed briefly against the background of the times and conditions in which the subject made his contribution to the nation. Their names may be well or may be little known now to the generation which has inherited the benefits of wise, laborious, and, in many instances, heroic work.)

(Picture in Rotogravure Section.)

(Henry Lee was born at Stratford, the home of the Lees, in Westmoreland county, Jan. 29, 1756. At eighteen he was graduated from Princeton. In 1777 he was commissioned captain in one of twenty-six companies of horse raised by Virginia to supply a cavalry need. He was promoted major for service in battle and given a partisan command. He was sent south in 1780 to aid Greene. He joined Marion and Sumter in their movements and successfully opposed his cavalry to Tarleton's and Rawdon's. He fought at Guilford Courthouse, took Augusta, and was at Eutaw Springs and Yorktown. He was a Virginia legislator and governor. He was in command of the troops which suppressed the whisky rebellion. Six years before his death he suffered severe injuries in defending the freedom of the press against a Baltimore mob. He was the congressional eulogist after the death of Washington, with "first in war, first in peace," etc. He was the author of a work on the war in the south. Light Horse Harry Lee, a beau sabreur himself, was also the father of the great general, Robert E. Lee.)

The Virginia cavalry joined Washington in New Jersey in the spring of 1777 and was available for the campaign which endeavored to keep Howe out of Philadelphia. Lee went rapidly through the apprenticeship to arms in the Brandywine and Germantown fighting and came to notice for his success in cutting off enemy detachments and bringing in prisoners and intelligence. Then followed the winter at Valley Forge with the desultory operations and small excursions to which Howe in Philadelphia restricted himself. The cavalry's part was to meet these raids and also to cut off supplies bound from the countryside to the city. (Good money got the British supplies from the Pennsylvania farmers just as in the next war, 1812-1814, it made New Yorkers and New Englanders the provisioners of the enemy in Canada.)

It was in January that Lee was involved in an affair which began his romantic legend. With a small body of troops he was surprised in his overnight quarters by a body of two hundred British dragoons. "About daybreak they appeared. (Lee's report to Washington.) We were immediately alarmed and manned the doors and windows. The contest was very warm; the British dragoons, trusting to their vast superiority in numbers, attempted to force their way into the house. . . . The enterprise was certainly daring, though the issue of it very ignominious. I had not a soldier for each window."

In the spring of 1778 Washington had been so impressed by the gallantry, talent, and resourcefulness of the young cavalry leader in dashing minor actions that he recommended him to congress for a commond "of two troops of horse with the rank of major to act as an independent partisan corps."

(Washington to congress: "Though in general I dislike independent corps, I think a partisan corps with an army useful in many respects. Its name and destination stimulate to enterprise.")

After Clinton had withdrawn the British army from Philadelphia to New York, fighting the battle of Monmouth and getting off the field with his wagon train, the contest in the north went virtually into stalemate. Action was transferred to the south and before long Light Horse Harry and his legion were sent down to help Gen. Greene in the attempted rescue of the harried southerners. Before this was done the episodic character of the war in the northern scene had been enlivened by two brilliant exploits and by an unexpected tragedy of personal morals.

One of the exploits was that of Mad Anthony Wayne with his choice light infantry in storming Stony Point without powder and ball. The other was an emulative achievement of Lee with his light horse in the surprise of the British at Paulus Hook (Jersey City), where there was a well protected outpost with a garrison of several hundred men, offering great difficulty of approach and being regarded as quite secure. Lee executed a well planned descent upon the post, entered the works in the early morning, and brought off 150 prisoners, receiving the applause of Washington, the compliments of congress, and an emblematical gold medal.

With both Wayne and Lee the coup de theatre was to animate the sluggish and dragging campaign and to revive the spirits of desponding patriots. As flashes of intrepidity they did so, but depression soon followed on the discovery of Arnold's dishonor and the danger to which West Point had been exposed. The capture of the traitor became a preoccupation of Washington and all his officers and to effect it Lee undertook an enterprise which even in failure afforded a remarkable military incident.

Arnold had fled to New York and had taken a British commission. Lee suggested to Washington a plan by which he might be seized in his quarters and brought out of the city. The man to whom its execution must be chiefly intrusted would take desperate chances, but Lee thought he had the man in his own well disciplined troops, a Sergeant Champe of whom Light Horse Harry wrote to Washington that he was a "very promising youth, of uncommon taciturnity and inflexible perseverance."

The danger of the enterprise was at no time greater than at its very beginning. To preserve secrecy and avoid all suspicion, Champe had to desert, and he did so with such complete deception of his fellow troopers that he nearly lost his life in their long and close run pursuit of him. The avengers of the troop's honor were so nearly on his horse's heels that he saved himself only by jumping into the river and swimming to a British boat with the musket fire plugging the water about his head.

His British rescuers were as completely deceived as the American cavalrymen had been. Lee was greatly worried by the entirely too convincing getaway of the sergeant. It had seemed altogether too probable that his uncommonly taciturn man would be killed at the very start of his adventure, leaving his commander an uneasy conscience. When the enraged but eluded pursuers came back Lee was elated. Champe in New York easily attached himself to Arnold's command. He was able to send reports out to Lee and Lee was able to send small sums of in to him.

It was discovered that Arnold had formed the habit of walking in the walled garden of his quarters each night after midnight before going to bed, with such reflections as may have come to a man in his position. Champe made his plans. Two associates had been provided for him in the city. One was to help Champe seize Arnold in the garden, gag him, and, once at large in the streets with him, they hoped to answer any inquiries by saying that they were taking a drunken man home. If they could get him to the water side the third man would be ready to put off with him in a boat. The night for this was fixed and that night Lee, with his dragoons, waited on the opposite shore at Hoboken.

That vigil was kept all night, but the boat did not come. Fate again had saved Arnold. He had embarked his command for the expedition to ravage Virginia. Champe was the victim of long service with Arnold before he was able to escape from the army at Petersburg. He made his way into the high country to the southwest. Lee had been sent to the south. Champe found his old troop in North Carolina. Before the astonished troopers could gang him Lee's welcome restored his reputation.

THE ADAMS FAMILY.

THE Adams family is a study in psychology and inheritance. From the time Henry Adams came to America, about 1636, until the advent of President John Adams, there were four generations of small New England farmers, of no outstanding capacities, characters, or accomplishments.

John, of the fourth American generation, married a Miss Boylston. With that marriage there came into the Adams family qualities hitherto absent.

James T. Adams, in telling the story of the Adams family, describes the newly acquired qualities of the Adams mind but stops there. He does not discuss the source of the new qualities, whether they were contributed thereto from the Boylston stock, whether they were the result of uniting the qualities of the Adams and Boylston stocks, or whether it was another illustration of De Vries' discontinuous variation.

At any rate, from that mating the Adams mental type resulted. J. T. Adams says the Adams mind is an "I" mind rather than a "We" mind. Nevertheless he, an Adams, gives great credit to various Adams mothers after Mrs. Susanna Boylston Adams. However, nothing revealed in the study indicates that Abigail Smith Adams, Luenda Johnson Adams, or Abigail Brooks Adams made any change in the Adams mind, either in the way of radical additions or subtractions.

The part of the story of interest in this connection is the analysis of the Adams mind as found in John Adams, John Quincy Adams, Charles Francis Adams, and the latter's four sons, John Quincy, Charles Francis, Henry, and Brooks. The writer does not try to make a distinction between emotions and the thinking that results therefrom and the more definitely intellectual processes. He does not classify personalities nor does he go deep into the analysis of personality.

He has set forth the material in a very frank, straightforward fashion and in doing so he has presented valuable material for students of psychology. It is true that the Adamses have always been the great American goldfish. Their frank diaries, letters, biographies, and autobiographies have made of them human exhibits. But it was not until Henry wrote his Education and James T. this family history that the X-ray showed all the bones in the Adams family.

This combination of personality, behavior, attitudes, emotions, and thinking, which is tagged the Adams mind, is an interesting study in psychology. It shows that the human mind at its very best, is a mixture of good and bad, of normal and healthy, with considerable abnormality—almost pathology.

EXAMINE PURCHASES.

South Haven, Mich., Aug. 4.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—About two weeks ago a sewing machine agent sold me an electric sewing machine, taking my old one in trade or as the first payment. He sold me a used machine, while I understood I was to have a new one. I am not satisfied with the machine he sold me, as it does not do the work a new one would, so I want him to take it back and return my old machine.

He tells me I have to pay for this machine and is charging me what I would have to pay for a new one. Can I hold him because he misrepresented the machine? MRS. C. S.

1. If you saw the machine that you were getting, the maxim "let the buyer beware" would apply.
2. You would not be entitled to return it because of dissatisfaction unless the contract expressly gives you this right.
3. You have not stated the nature of the misrepresentations.

REPAIR OR DESTROY.

Chicago, Aug. 4.—[Friend of the People.]—In the rear of the 5800 block on Broadway is a small shack, built against the wall of a large automobile garage and directly up to the alley. This is in the rear of a small fender repair shop, and is vacant except for a quantity of rubbish that has been put into it to keep it out of the parking lot.

This is a particularly dangerous building, as it is not uncommon to see several tramps and undesirable characters in and around here at all hours of the day. E. C.

The owner of the dilapidated shed has been given a final notice to put shed in good and safe condition or demolish. Upon failure to comply legal proceedings will be commenced against the owner.

FROM THE TRIBUNE'S COLUMNS

16 YEARS AGO TODAY

AUGUST 17, 1914.

LONDON.—A Nish dispatch, dated Aug. 16, says: "A naval battle between French and Austrian warships began off Budua, Austria, in the Adriatic this morning. The French squadron attacked the Austrian ships. Two Austrian ironclads were sunk, one was set on fire and a fourth fled towards Cattaro."

TOKIO.—The general expectation is that Japan's ultimatum to Germany demanding the withdrawal of German warships from the orient and the evacuation of Kiau-Chau by Aug. 23 will be followed by war.

PARIS.—Official announcements assert the French army has advanced all along the battle front. The French are said to have won victories at Dinant, south of Namur; at Sainte Marie-aux-Mines, at Blamont and Cirey, in the Schirmeck valley.

NISH, Servia. — Austrian troops tried to pass the Save river under protection of their artillery, but were compelled to retire in disorder by a well sustained Servian cannonade.

SPRING GREEN, Wis. — Mamah Borthwick Cheney was buried in a grave in Hillside valley. Frank Lloyd Wright, builder of the love bungalow, stood alone at the end of his "spiritual hegira" as the woman was laid to rest in the hills where she had made herself an exile for an unconventional love. Her two children, slain by the Negro who killed her, were sent back to Chicago for cremation in charge of Edwin H. Cheney, the man Mamah Borthwick left for Wright.

30 YEARS AGO TODAY

AUGUST 17, 1900.

LONDON.—A Shanghai dispatch says: "The allies entered Peking on Aug. 15. It is believed that Yuan-Shi-Kai's troops have gone to Shen-si to protect the empress who, with Tuan, the imperial household and the bulk of the army and Boxers, is reported to have left Peking on Aug. 7 for Hsian-Fu."

LONDON.—A cablegram from Hongkong announces the capture of Peking by the international forces. The Japanese, Russians, British and Americans were foremost in the march on the city. The rescue of the foreign ministers, after a campaign costing thousands of lives, is one of the most remarkable episodes in the history of the century. Since early in June the ministers, their households and a small number of marines have been besieged. Night and day, almost without cessation, they were under rifle and artillery fire of the Chinese imperial troops and Boxers.

EAST LAS VEGAS, N. M. — Ex-United States Senator John J. Ingalls of Kansas is dead of bronchitis with heart complications. He was 66 years old.

65 YEARS AGO TODAY

AUGUST 17, 1865.

ST. LOUIS.—A letter from Fort Ripley, Kas., says the Indians have been very troublesome recently. About 38 or 40 men of the 11th Kansas cavalry were murdered by them at Fort Yarah, near Fort Ripley, and the Indians also captured a train of military stores. The slain soldiers were part of the escort of the train.

NEW YORK.—The total of the defalcations and forgeries of young Ketchum of the firm of Ketchum, Son & Co. will probably reach $4,000,000. New victims appear almost every hour. The failure of the company has brought a rush of brokers and financiers back to town from the watering places.

NEWBERN, N. C.—The northern immigration to North Carolina has set in. People are arriving by the thousands from all quarters of the north.

CHICAGO.—Lieut. Gen. Grant, Mrs. Grant and their four children and several major generals and other military officers reached the city yesterday from Detroit and are quartered at the Tremont house. Because of Gen. Grant's wish to remain undisturbed our citizens refrained from making any demonstration in his honor. A special train tomorrow will carry the party to Gen. Grant's home at Galena, where citizens of Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa have arranged for a great ovation for the man who returns to them the greatest living military chieftain.

THE COMMUNITY TRUST.

New York, Aug. 7.—In case the distinguished men constituting the committee of the Chicago Community Trust should be reluctant to urge their own defense, it may not be wholly unfitting for a non-Chicagoan to submit the consideration that THE TRIBUNE'S leading editorial of July 25 on "Changing Fashions in Philanthropy" misgauges the present and future value of the Chicago Community Trust to Cook county and Illinois.

Here is an organization that in a few years has accumulated several millions of dollars to be applied solely for "the mental, moral, intellectual and physical improvement, assistance and relief of the inhabitants of the county of Cook, state of Illinois, regardless of age, color or creed," and that last year distributed $93,000 among sixty-seven Chicago institutions whose work is a blessing and a benediction in that great center of population. Surely the existence and growth and beneficent operation of that fund is more important and significant than the relatively subordinate fact of whether it annually pays out its income only or income plus a percentage of principal.

In passing it is not easy to follow your argument that, with respect to the trust's average gifts of $1,400 to each of sixty-seven institutions, "the chances of achieving anything with gifts of this size are not great." If these additions of $1,400 are translated into terms of days of visiting nurse service, or free clinic care, or scholarships, or tenement children's vacations, I make bold to say that the sixty-seven institutional recipients and many hundreds of individual beneficiaries will be prepared to testify that $1,400, added to receipts that are usually too small, is rarely negligible and frequently of enormous importance.

Great as is the admiration and affection I feel—with millions of his countrymen—for Mr. Rosenwald, I have found it difficult to concur in his reasoning that because it may be wrong to forbid trustees to disburse principal it becomes proper to go to the opposite extreme of compulsion and force them to do so. Would it not be more reasonable to say that, instead of being obliged to retain principal or compelled to spend it, these admittedly able custodians should be given freedom to do either, as circumstances may require?

I hope it may not seem ungracious to say that the contents of your editorial would indicate that the writer of it has not had occasion to examine the declaration which created the Chicago Community Trust. That document provides that not only shall the income of all funds constituting the Community Trust be spent but, if the five members of the Community Trust committee, the trustee and the chief justice of the Supreme court of Illinois are in agreement, 20 per cent of the principal of any or all trust funds of the trust shall be available for distribution in any year.

Not unnaturally, the administrators of the trust appear to have adopted the policy of conserving and accumulating principal in these initial years; but in view of the provision just quoted, I venture to say that the Community Trust, far from deserving to be damned with faint praise, is worthy of your heartiest commendation. RALPH HAYES.

IRISH CRITICS AND CENSORS.

Chicago, Aug. 4.—Allow me to object to the slush peddled by Mr. Hugh Curran in his articles on the status of literature in Ireland. There is irrefutable evidence that the people of Ireland and the Free State government are both hostile to sincere, artistic literary work. The censorship laws are idiotic, and foreign books of quality are banned. "Point Counter Point," by Aldous Huxley, is a case in point. Also, the writings of Ireland's leading artists have been continually censored. Almost ten years elapsed between the completion and the publication of James Joyce's "Dubliners," because of public opinion. Also try to get a copy of "Ulysses" into Dublin. Brinsley MacNamara's "The Valley of the Squinting Windows" caused drastic criticism and vituperation; and I have been informed that the author was practically run out of his native village. Synge's plays caused typical Hibernian riots. "The Plough and the Stars" was appreciated by catcalls, and O'Casey was unable to get his last play produced in Dublin. Yeats' "Kathleen Ni Houlihan" brought forth the prejudiced attacks of mother church.

A. E.'s Irish Statesman existed mainly by grace of foreign assistance, and went broke because Irishmen wouldn't pay a few pennies a week for a civilized periodical. Also, why did Ernest Boyd leave home for America? Why did writers like Joyce, George Moore, Shaw, Shean O'Casey emigrate to other countries? The answer is obvious. Ireland will have none of these foul fellows who write first rate criticisms or great books. As Mr. Ernest Boyd says, an Irish literary artist is known all over the world . . . except in Dublin.

JAMES T. FARRELL.

OLYMPIADS.

Evanston, Ill., Aug. 4.—In Sunday's rotogravure section of THE TRIBUNE appeared an illustration of the medal to be awarded at the air races to be held this month, one side being inscribed "The Olympiad of the Air." In ancient times the Olympic games, held every four years, were considered of such importance that the Greeks used them in reckoning time and the periods between the games were called Olympiads. Thus the period of four years between the first and second set of games was the first Olympiad, that between the second and third set was the second Olympiad, and so on. So it is quite plain that these air races, whatever else they may be called, should not be called an "Olympiad." FRED R. OHL.

16 YEARS AGO.

Chicago, Aug. 4.—I find your accounts of sixteen years ago very interesting. I was not of age then to read the newspaper and the only stories of the world war I have read have been from history books and fiction. I enjoy reading the accounts direct from the newspaper. I wish you would keep up these accounts as long as it is possible.

CHICAGO HOST THIS WEEK TO AMERICAN BAR

Noted Lawyers of Other Lands to Attend.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

Chicago will be host this week to more than 5,000 lawyers from European countries, Canada and all parts of the United States, who are coming here for the 53d annual meeting of the American Bar association.

While the main sessions will not begin until Wednesday, there are many conferences of delegates and sectional meetings scheduled to begin tomorrow morning at the Stevens hotel, headquarters for the association.

George W. Wickersham, chairman of President Hoover's law enforcement commission, will address the delegates in the ballroom of the Stevens hotel on Wednesday afternoon. The morning session that day will be devoted to business and committee reports, with an address of welcome by President Henry U. Sims of Birmingham, Ala.; N. W. Rowell, K. C., Toronto, Ontario, will address the evening session on Wednesday.

Hughes to Speak Thursday.

Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes will address the delegates at the Civic Opera house on Thursday evening. There will be responses by representatives of the bar from England, France, Scotland, the Irish Free State, and Canada. The sessions of that day will be devoted to committee reports, with a special address by Thomas D. Thatcher, solicitor general of the United States.

The sessions will end on Friday with the annual dinner of the association. The speakers for that day have not been announced.

Entertainment plans for the delegates extend through Saturday and include the Chicagoland Music festival at the stadium that evening.

Reports which have already been published for the benefit of the delegates carry interesting committee comment on such subjects as American citizenship, the federal farm board act, criminal law, radio law, and professional ethics, and promise many lively sessions.

Cite Wet-Dry Issue.

The American Citizenship committee, of which F. Dumont Smith is chairman, reports that its immediate and principal objective is the celebration of Constitution week beginning Sept. 14. In this connection the report says:

"One difficulty that we are having is the acrimonious controversy between the wets and drys. From points as widely separated as Texas, central New York and Vermont, lawyers write us they are afraid to undertake such a celebration this year because the wets will consider it a dry move and the drys will consider it a wet move, that the celebration is put on either for or against the eighteenth amendment.

"Of course we are doing neither. This committee is neither wet nor dry and it has nothing to do with that controversy."

Referendum Under Way.

In a recent letter to THE TRIBUNE, Mr. Smith said that a referendum was under way to determine whether the association should express itself on the 18th amendment, and that if the answer was favorable a postal card vote would be taken later.

"Personally, and speaking only for myself," he wrote, "I have always been opposed to the 18th amendment as a departure from the fundamentals of our government, and I have always condemned it, because in spite of the decisions of the Supreme court of the United States, I do not believe it was submitted by the majority in Congress that is required under the constitution, and that it was therefore never legally adopted."

Hits Farm Relief Act.

In its report this committee assails the farm relief act as the "first step toward a socialistic soviet government," and says:

"It is not the purpose of this act to 'provide for the general welfare' of all the people, to lower the price of food or increase their comfort. The avowed purpose is to raise the price of bread to 90 per cent of the people in order that 10 per cent may have a larger profit in producing it.

"If one group of mendicants can come to the doors of Congress, and with a threat of votes, loot the treasury, other groups will follow the example."

Spotlight on Gang Life.

The criminal law section of the association will meet on Tuesday. A feature will be an address by Calvin Goddard, director of the scientific criminal detection laboratory affiliated with Northwestern university. John Landesco, research director of the American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, will speak on "Gang Life and Organized Crime in Chicago."

The judicial section, meeting the same day, will hear from Justice Frederic R. De Young of the Illinois Supreme court, Frederick E. Crane of the Court of Appeals of New York, and Evan A. Evans of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Chicago.

Public utility law, mineral laws, and radio laws have important parts in the sessions.

The report of the standing committee on international law deals with the London naval conference.

The committee on noteworthy changes in the statute law reports:

"The course of criminal legislation in 1929 makes it evident that the tendency toward strict punishment for recidivists, especially fourth offenders, still persists. The session laws, however, evidence the belief that some classification is necessary to temper the severity of the original laws, instead of the broad condemnation of all third and fourth offenders to long term or even life imprisonment.

"Special punishments for the use of bombs, machine guns, and armored cars are illustrative of the enterprise of the organized gangs who form so important an element in American life."

A luncheon in honor of Capt. Fergus Dunlop Morton of England, who will attend the Bar association meeting, will be given on Thursday at the Stevens hotel by the Alumni association of the Northwestern university school of law. Henry Barrett Chamberlin is president of the association.

FOOD RING OPERATES IN NEW YORK, SAYS ATTORNEY GENERAL

New York, Aug. 16.—[U. P.]—Assistant Attorney General Groat announced today he has gathered evidence of a "powerful food combination" which operates to control consumer prices of foodstuffs here.

He said he will offer his evidence Monday to Maj. John Holley Clark Jr., appointed by Supreme Court Justice Faber to conduct a general inquiry into food prices.

Announcement of the food ring was made after Groat had spent a busy day examining witnesses including housewives, storekeepers, coöperative marketing organization managers, and others, some of whom he described as "guerrillas."

The disclosures he is ready to make, Groat said, will "blow the lid off" the operations of a "profiteering ring" whose leaders he declined to name.

Canadian Bar Elects St. Laurent as President

RECOMMEND AIR CODE FOR STATES TO FIT U. S. RULES

Uniform Law Conference Is Adjourned.

The national conference of commissioners on uniform state laws adjourned last night after a week's sessions in which four acts were recommended to state and territorial legislatures for adoption. These were acts on child labor, jurisdiction in divorce, firearms, and air licensing. The conference refused to adopt an absent voter's act and recommended to a committee a proposed act dealing with hasty marriages.

The air licensing act, which would put the states adopting it in conformity with federal laws on this subject, was adopted yesterday by the commissioners. An act on trust receipts was adopted tentatively and put over another year, as was action on mechanic's lien laws and the Hoover conference act on highway safety.

The conference struck a snag in this latter act. It was proposed as a basic rule that "no person shall drive a vehicle upon a highway at a speed greater than is reasonable and prudent, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway and the hazard at intersections and any other conditions then existing."

Called Too Indefinite.

As violation of this was made a misdemeanor, the objection was raised that it was too indefinite. It was purposely made so, according to the committee chairman, who said that a man driving at 40 miles through a snowstorm was far more guilty than a man driving 65 on a good country road.

An arbitrary speed law cannot be enforced, he said, and the committee was trying to get away from that and other unenforceable laws, making it a crime to operate an automobile recklessly at any speed. As more opposition developed the committee asked permission to report progress and bring the matter before the conference at another time.

Joseph F. O'Connell, Boston attorney and Democratic candidate for the United States senate, proposed a law for uniform hours of labor. This was referred to the committee on scope and program for a report at the next meeting.

Favors Shorter Hours.

"Uniform hours of labor must be established sooner or later by law," Mr. O'Connell said. "This is for the protection of society and of business, and for the equitable distribution of work among the entire population. With the rapid mechanization of industry and increased production, there must be better distribution among all people of jobs or chaos threatens. Unemployment cannot continue indefinitely The solution is shorter hours and more workers. It is not impossible that the six hour day, five day week, and possibly the ten month year is the solution."

DOG SHOW WILL OPEN SEPT. 14 AT NORTHBROOK

The Shore Line Kennel club will hold its second annual dog show for all breeds on Sept. 14 at Northbrook. The sponsors expect an entry list of 800 dogs. In conjunction with the show the Debermann Pinscher club will put on a special exhibition of dogs of that breed.

Among the judges will be Mrs. Irene Castle McLaughlin, German shepherds; Dr. G. A. Mills of Wausau, Wis., Airedales; Mrs. Richard Quigley of Lock Haven, Pa., Pekinese; Emmet J. Tyler, sporting dogs; Ferd Kramer, English bulldogs; and Col. M. Robert Guggenheim, chows and nonsporting dogs. Martin J. Hogan, master of the Thomas M. Howell kennels at Barrington, will give an exhibition of Labrador retrievers.

KILLS SELF WHILE AT WORK.

Despondent because of ill health, Robert Cotton, 50 years old, 5204 South Spaulding avenue, yesterday shot and killed himself in the Grand Trunk railway machine shop, 51st street and South St. Louis avenue, where he was foreman.

KANSAS GLAND DOCTOR APPEARS IN NOVEL ROLE

Tried to Revive Milford Church, It's Said.

BY THE REV. JOHN EVANS.

Goat gland operations by Dr. John Brinkley, the Milford, Kas., surgeon now on trial for alleged quackery, may or may not have put new life into his patients. But Prof. Carl H. Hutchinson of the Chicago Theological Seminary, a recent visitor at Milford, declared yesterday that specialist's work during the last ten years in the religious life of that Kansas village has failed to put a permanent kick in what was intended to be "The Brinkley Methodist Episcopal church."

Prof. Hutchinson has just returned from a church research tour of several central western states. He included Milford, Kas., on his itinerary, due to the reports he had heard of Dr. Brinkley's influence on the religious life of that community. Prof. Hutchinson was gathering material to aid young pastors in avoiding wrong methods.

Prof. Hutchinson declared Dr. Brinkley had attempted to dominate the church life of Milford "in order to secure religious sanction for his methods and conduct."

Brinkley Discovers Milford.

Dr. Brinkley entered Milford on the eve of what seemed to be the assured success of a church union venture, Prof. Hutchinson pointed out. The goat gland specialist opened his office in the village, which soon divided into two camps—one group that declared Dr. Brinkley to be a quack, another supported him.

The next development came from the influence of Dr. Brinkley's financial advancement as well as the evidence of prosperity the surgeon's practice brought to the community, Prof. Hutchinson's research revealed. Then Dr. Brinkley turned to religious affairs.

"When Dr. Brinkley turned to the church, he demanded that the union project be abandoned and at once. He negotiated with the district superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal church for the revival of the Methodist congregation. Dr. Brinkley's offer was speedily accepted," Prof. Hutchinson declared.

The professor's research material further reveals that Dr. Brinkley had offered prizes of $5 to each child who joined the Brinkley Methodist Sunday school. It also pointed to evidence that Dr. Brinkley boasted "Christ did not build the Milford Methodist church; therefore it would not bear Christ's name, but would be called the Brinkley Methodist church.

Milford Discovers Brinkley.

Prof. Hutchinson's studies at Milford will be used to illustrate the way in which individuals may use a local congregation under their control to smother criticism of their conduct. Prof. Hutchinson pointed out that in a village of 100 people very few secrets about people's conduct may be kept.

"Concerning the charges against Dr. Brinkley's personal conduct," Prof. Hutchinson said, "some people dedemurred, but they demurred very mildly, and it is admitted that the Brinkley Methodist church found no blight on its benefactor's personal character."

On the other hand, Prof. Hutchinson found that Dr. Brinkley's admirers pointed to such points of personal conduct as evidences of the surgeon's genius. Other points applauded as marke of greatness in Dr. Brinkley were his broadcasts. Prof. Hutchinson spoke of the goat gland specialist's sermons which interspersed his advertising programs.

"I have heard patients speak of the deeply spiritual nature of Dr. Brinkley's sermons and declare that if Dr. Brinkley could preach such wonderful Christian messages he must be a great surgeon, and a man to be trusted," said Prof. Hutchinson. "My research revealed that Dr. Brinkley had used laudable wisdom in sending selected readings from Papini's 'Life of Christ' over the ether."

When the medical association proceeded against Dr. Brinkley on the charges of quackery, the Methodist bishop of the Kansas area put a stop to the building program of the Brinkley Methodist church. Prof. Hutchinson also stated the church's pastor's services had been withdrawn and that "it is probable that the future of the church situation in Milford now rests heavily on the actions of the Kansas courts and the state medical association."

OIL MAN DIES

THOMAS B. SLICK.

STROKE FATAL TO T. SLICK, RICHEST OIL INDEPENDENT

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Thomas B. Slick of Oklahoma City, known as the wealthiest independent oil operator in the world, died early today at Johns Hopkins hospital, where he had been a patient since June 27, of an apoplectic stroke that followed an operation Aug. 5.

Mr. Slick, who was 46 years old, often was referred to as "King of the Wildcatters" in his long career in Pennsylvania, Texas, Kansas, and Oklahoma. In March, 1929, he sold his western holdings to the Prairie Oil and Gas company for $45,000,000, but did not retire and was in the midst of new operations in Texas, Kansas, and Oklahoma when he entered the hospital. In 1912 he sold Illinois holdings for $2,500,000.

Mr. Slick's romantic climb from teamster to the top of the individual oil producing heap kept him in the public eye. Born at Clarion, Pa., he had lived and operated in recent years principally in the Oklahoma field.

REALTY DEALER LEAPS 17 STORIES TO DEATH IN LOOP

Hoffman Concern's Assets Frozen, Lawyer Says.

Harold Hoffman, 43 years old, south side realty dealer, leaped to his death yesterday morning from a seventeenth story window of the Masonic Temple building, 32 West Randolph street. His body crashed into the court behind the Oriental theater. Hoffman was senior member of the Hoffman & Becker company, 356 East 51st street. He lived at 5511 Cornell avenue.

The realty man had gone to the office of his attorney, Samuel Grossman, who occupies room 1720 in the Masonic Temple building, at an early hour, before the lawyer had arrived. After waiting a few minutes he left the office and a few seconds later a man on the sixth floor saw Hoffman's body hurtle past a window. He was believed to have jumped from the seventeenth floor washroom.

Grossman said Hoffman's firm had got into difficulties following the failure of the Roosevelt Bankers' State bank. The depression of south side real estate values had frozen the concern's assets, Grossman asserted, although the business was solvent.

A creditors' meeting was to have been held tomorrow, Grossman said, at which it was hoped that capital sufficient to stabilize the concern could be raised. Hoffman looked forward to the meeting apprehensively, the attorney said. The dead man had been in the real estate business on the south side for 20 years.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Gussie Hoffman, and by a daughter, Johanna, a year and a half old. Funeral arrangements have not been made. The body was taken to the rooms at 226 West Randolph street.

PERSIA DELIVERS WAR ULTIMATUM IN TURKISH ROW

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Aug. 16.—It was reported in London that the Persian commander of the Tabriz district has been ordered to deliver an ultimatum to the leader of the Turkish punitive expeditions attacking the Kurd tribes in the Mount Ararat district that unless the frontier is cleared immediately it will be considered an act of war and Persia will attack.

The tension has increased since the unexplained recall yesterday of the Turkish ambassador, Memdou Chevoket Bey, from Teheran. Turkey is now seeking outside means of settling the dispute. It is reliably reported here that Kemal Pasha, Turkey's president, has obtained the promise of Amanullah Khan, former king of Afghanistan, to act as personal intermediary to Shah Rizh Khan of Persia. Amanullah is an intimate friend of the Turkish president and his daughter expects to become bride of the Persian crown prince.

ARREST PASTOR; END DRIVE FOR BIBLE FUNDS

Pontiac, Mich., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Final impetus to the collapse of what officials term the "Most colossal thelogical swindle on record," was given this morning when the Rev. Elmer C. Johnston, president of the proposed Johnston Bible college, waived examination in Municipal court on a bad check charge and was bound over to Circuit court under $500 bond.

The Rev. Johnston, with his assistant, the Rev. Robin McKay, who is held in jail here for investigation, announced plans for the $300,000 undenominational Bible college three weeks ago and after an impressive ground breaking ceremony, opened an office to solicit contributions.

The list of contributors seized by prosecutor's office carried the names of several prominent citizens, among them nearly all candidates for county office.

LEAPS TO DEATH

HAROLD HOFFMAN.

FIRST OF THREE NOTED FROHMAN BROTHERS DEAD

New York, Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Gustave Frohman, former theatrical producer and manager and a brother of Daniel Frohman and of the late Charles Frohman, died early today at his home on the upper west side. He was in his 76th year.

Mr. Frohman was the first of the three brothers to be attracted to the theater, beginning his career at the age of 17 years as manager of a minstrel show. That was back in 1871. In later years he brought his two brothers, Daniel and Charles, into the business in New York.

Gustave Frohman, like many of the other old time producers and managers of the theater, started many stage players of 25 years ago on the road to stardom.

Mr. Frohman retired about twelve years ago. Prior to that he had been associated with his brother, Charles, in the theatrical business. This association was ended with the death of Charles who lost his life in the sinking of the Titanic.

JAMES C. DAVIS LEAVES $400,000 TO HIS WIDOW

The will of the late James C. Davis, vice president of the American Steel Foundries company, was filed for probate yesterday with Probate Court Clerk Mitchell C. Robin. Under the terms of the will the entire estate, valued at $400,000, is left to his widow, Mrs. Blanche L. Davis. The will specifically denies James C. Davis Jr., his son, a share in the estate.

The estate consists entirely of bonds. According to Attorney Charles S. Cutting, who filed the will, Mr. Davis had sold his stock in the Americal Steel Foundries company shortly before his death on Aug. 10 at Mackinac island. The will provides that in the event of Mrs. Davis' death the estate shall be divided, two-thirds to her daughter, Mrs. Dorothy D. Cortis, 950 Glenlake avenue, and one-third to Mrs. James C. Davis Jr.

Ferry Boat Tips; 21 on Way from Church Are Drowned

BELGRADE, Jugo-Slavia, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Twenty-one peasants of Gjurejevitza village were drowned in the River Drau on their way home from church today by the swamping of a ferry boat. The boat, a small craft, was heavily overloaded. Five passengers were saved.

DELAY IN FIRING PRISON COST 320 CONVICTS' LIVES

So Say Officers in Ohio Penitentiary Case.

Columbus, O., Aug. 16.—(AP)—A delay in the operation of a fuse caused 320 convicts to die in the Easter Monday fire at the Ohio penitentiary but prevented the possible escape of 4,000 into the city of Columbus to spread terror, officials investigating the cause of the blaze revealed today.

Investigators found that a group of convicts had planned to set fire to the I and K cell blocks while hundreds of their comrades were in the mess hall and out in the prison yard. The convicts planned a break for liberty during the confusion.

Fire Started Late.

For some unknown reason, however, a taper or candle lit and timed to set fire to the oil soaked roof over blocks I and K at 4:30 p. m. failed to have effect until 6 p. m., investigators revealed. At that time the convicts were locked in their cell blocks for the night, and those in the upper tiers of G and H perished before guards could open the cell doors.

Joseph D. Clear, the state fire marshal's chief investigator, who has been questioning prisoners at the prison here and at Mansfield and London since the fire, had two convicts taken secretly to the Columbus city prison Thursday night for further examination. What information the questioners expect ultimately to obtain was not revealed.

Half Dozen in Plot.

At least half a dozen prisoners were involved in the fire plot, one of whom died in the flames, according to Ray R. Gill, state fire marshal, Clear, and F. Bryne Hues, the marshal's legal adviser.

The officials said that during the fire the convicts planned to seize the ladders from Columbus firemen and scale the walls. The firemen did not enter the yards until National Guardsmen and regular army troops had been thrown around the prison. The convicts did cut the hose lines, however.

No evidence of explosives was found in the cells, Clear said.

CHARLES GRAVES DIES SUDDENLY ON EASTERN LINKS

Charles L. Graves, 34 years old, 757 Foxdale avenue, Winnetka, district manager of the auto accessories department of Montgomery Ward and company, dropped dead yesterday of heart disease while playing golf near Princeton, N. J. Relatives here were notified by telegraph.

Mr. Graves was a son of Mrs. Charles L. Graves, whose husband, a realty broker in the east, died in 1912. He leaves three sisters, Miss Annell Graves and Mrs. Kathleen Ammerman of Winnetka, and Mrs. C. I. Rehnquist, 7635 South Shore drive, Chicago. He was a member of the Lake Shore Athletic club.

Interment will take place at Lexington, Ky., the family plot.

Mrs. George W. Kretzinger Dies at Paris Hotel Home

Mrs. George W. Kretzinger, 70 years old, widow of George W. Kretzinger, Chicago corporation lawyer, died yesterday at her hotel residence in Paris, where she had resided many years, according to a cable. She leaves a son, George W. Kretzinger Jr., and a daughter, Clara, a well known painter and member of the Chicago Arts club. The funeral will be held in Paris.

POLICE DECLARE NORTH SIDE IS RID OF HOODLUMS NOW

North side hoodlums have taken to the hinterlands since Judge John H. Lyle declared war upon them, the jurist was told by seven police captains and one lieutenant yesterday when he called them together to learn what progress has been made in cleaning their districts of gangsters. The hoodlums are "out of the city," the officers said.

Capt. Thomas Duffy of Sheffield avenue said publicity given Lyle's drive cleaned his district; Capt. Patrick Harding of Rogers Park said the Aiello brothers, Dominick and Joe, of the Moran gang, had left; and the other station commanders said visits to known gangster hangouts proved unproductive.

"I can't believe that all the hoodlums are out of the city," Judge Lyle said. "I am a little disappointed at the results shown since our last meeting. Instruct your squads to bear down heavily over the week-end."

VATICAN ORDERS SCHOOL CHILDREN STUDY RELIGION

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ROME, Aug. 16.—Another phase of the Lateran accords between the church and the state in Italy was carried out today, when the Vatican issued instruction to all dioceses in Italy on the selection of teachers of religious instruction in the secondary schools and their duties.

Previous to the Lateran pact religious instruction was confined to primary schools under state supervision. In accordance with the treaty the Vatican now has a right to propose all teachers of religion in the secondary schools as well, and may also decide what text books on religion will be used.

Today's instructions insist that religious courses be obligatory to all pupils except those whose parents ask special exemption. Bishops and teachers are instructed to see that religious instruction be given to all possible pupils and the priests are admonished to urge the parents of their duty in the matter. All religious text books must be approved by the bishops. Most teachers must be monks and priests. In faculty meetings they have the same rights and duties as other teachers, with a voice and vote in the conduct and discipline of the school.

GEN. TRUJILLO, 37, TAKES OFFICE AS DOMINGO'S CHIEF

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Gen. Rafael L. Trujillo, 37, trained in the U. S. marines, today was inducted into office as president of the Dominican republic.

Rafael E. Urena, provisional president since February, three years Trujillo's senior, became vice president. Thus a government, probably the youngest on record, came into control of the oldest nation in the new world in this city founded in 1496 by Christopher Columbus and his son, Diego.

The United States minister and Gov. Theodore Roosevelt of Porto Rico were represented by Felix Cordova Davila, Porto Rican commissioner in Washington, and Carlos E. Chardon, commissioner of agriculture. President Trujillo delivered his inaugural address from the roof of the bastion, cradle of Dominican independence.

FEMININE GARB MORE ROMANTIC AND EXPENSIVE

Luxury New Keynote of Fashion.

New York, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Feminine frills are going to reek of romance this fall and winter.

Bobbed hair is out, soft voices are back, and a curve is once more in its place, lines and loops and laces, perfume and powder and pearls—these are the stuff of which winter wardrobes will be fashioned, designed subtly around furs and velvets.

To be in style may cost more money than in years gone by. But, instead of being sad news to les Americaines and the men who pay the bills, it's going to gladden their hearts, New York fashion experts back from Paris say, for it will make milady a "lady" again. If one feminine dress costs a bit more, she can have one less—but feminine it must be.

Romance Replaces Jazz.

"Romance in clothes has come to stay for a while," one of the buyers said today. "When we saw the first collections we thought them a bit too expensive. We marched out—but we marched right back again and that's just what the woman who wears them will do."

The rôle that romance plays this year has been inspired by woman's weariness with the jazz vogue, says Miss Ferle Heller, New York fashionist who returned yesterday from Paris.

"Women have gone back to being women again," she said. "Look at their hair! Smart Parisian women don't wear bobs any more. They wear their hair just long enough to curl up at the nape of the neck or to make a very flat coil.

Hats Designed for Hair.

"And the hats are designed for such hair. They are pert little tricorns, worn to one side of the head to reveal much hair on the other and draped with a veil that just misses the nose. Or they're berets or bicorns, tilted from the face.

"The clothes look as though they might have been inspired by the paintings of Garvani. They reflect elegance and charm—they're made of rich materials and they're luxuriously furred."

The smart woman's winter coat will likely be black or tête-de-negre [dark brown], the buyers say. It's going to snug her waist and flare gently at the bottom. Its fur collar will be large and its fur cuffs will often reach her elbows.

Evenings Gowns Décolleté.

Her evening gown will be more décolleté than it has been in years. Pink lace, green chiffon, ivory satin are the materials of which it will be made and its lines will fit closely about her hips and flare at her knees.

Even her gloves reflect romance. Dark ones for daytime wear, reaching above her elbows, may be banded in wide strips of fur, while her evening gloves, matching her dress in color, may be topped by a rhinestone pattern.

And the length of her skirt? Longer than ever, say the buyers. It will be six to eight inches above the street by day, and clearing the floor by two inches by night.

Chief Justice Hughes Back from Motor Trip Abroad

New York, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Charles Evans Hughes, chief justice of the United States, returned with his wife and daughter, Elizabeth, on the Leviathan today from a motor trip through northern France and Belgium.

QUESTION: Why does Alwart sell coal for less than other coal dealers in Chicago?

OUR ANSWER: Because ALWART buys large quantities of coal at the mines when prices are lowest, has adequate storage facilities and efficient handling equipment, then adds a fair margin of profit to our cost and with MODERN MERCHANDISING METHODS, VOLUME SALES, AND QUICK TURNOVER REDUCES COSTS AND CREDIT LOSSES. Not being a member of any association, therefore taking no dictation from any one as to what our selling prices shall be, WE CAN AND DO SELL FOR LESS.

28,000 CASH CUSTOMERS saved over $250,000 during the year 1929 buying coal from ALWART.

THAT'S OUR STORY. WE WILL APPRECIATE AN OPPORTUNITY TO PROVE IT.

STATE FAIR IS RECORD BREAKER IN EVERY WAY

High Officials See Opening Parade.

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 16.—[U. P.]—A living encyclopedia of farm live stock, poultry and products, and of birds and fish that abound in Illinois woods and streams unfolded itself to the views of many thousands as they swarmed through the gates to attend the opening of the 78th annual Illinois state fair today. The fair will continue through to next Saturday.

The peace time tread of veterans of American wars marked today's opening as the day was given over entirely to them.

Looking on during the parade were Gov. Louis L. Emmerson and high ranking officers of the army and navy who had been invited by Gov. Emmerson to occupy the reviewing stand.

All records for livestock entries at an Illinois state fair, generally conceded as the greatest agricultural exhibit in the United States, were held today with the announcement that 6,000 animals are competing.

CHICAGO'S RENTAL DIRECTORY

WIN A LOTTERY; START A SEARCH FOR BURIED GOLD

Chicago Trio Begins a World Voyage.

New York, Aug. 16.—[Special.]—With her shrouds and stays tarred and taut and her strakes clean and fresh, the forty-six foot topsail schooner, Swordfish, with a crew of two men and one woman, lay at anchor in the Hudson tonight sixty-three days out of Chicago, with forty thousand miles of seaways and three years of cruising ahead of her.

Fresh water sailors, 29 year old Robert N. Cook, and his wife, Lenore, of Chicago, and Don Dickson of Evanston, Ill., brought the tidy little craft through a seventy-five mile storm just south of the straits of Mackinac, and piloted her through three of the great lakes and down the Erie canal and the Hudson river to moorings off the Hudson River Yacht club.

With her lockers and lazarette crammed with provisions and her tanks full of water, the Swordfish is waiting for her round-the-world cruise and the strange adventures that lie ahead of her. Within ten days, Cook hopes to take her out of New York bay and set a course for the tropic seas, but he expects before that time to recruit a fellow adventurer.

Search for Gold Ahead.

With a scheduled stop at the Cocos islands to search for buried treasure, exploration of the Galapagos and a long cruise through the south seas, Mr. Cook feels that he is offering a real adventure to some one.

The three shipmates never sailed on salt water before.

"I was always lucky," the "skipper" explained. "This trip really started three years ago when I had a bit of luck. I had been playing a printers' pool in Chicago and I suddenly won $1,000. My wife and I decided to put it away for this trip, and ever since then each of us has been saving $100 a month for the cruise. We bought the schooner for $4,000. She was in need of fixing up pretty badly, but her hull was good and sound. She's seven years old, built for sword fishing. She's a two master and carries 1,194 square feet of regular running canvas.

Two Quit Trip Early.

"We left Chicago on June 14 with five in our crew, on a nine hour trip up Lake Michigan to Milwaukee. The lake kicked up a bit and two of our crew, two brothers, got pretty sick, so they decided they'd leave us. That held us up a bit, while we got reorganized on the three person basis. Don and I managed three hours on, and three hours off all right on the lakes, but we want another man, who is capable of taking the wheel before we get out into the open sea. But if we don't get one, we'll go anyway."

Taking her departure from the United States the schooner will sail to Havana, thence to Jamaica and Haiti and to Porto Rico. After crossing the Panama canal, the Swordfish will go to the Cocos islands, where decades ago, legend goes, $10,000,000 in gold ingots and "pieces of eight" was buried. After the gold hunt the schooner will sail to the Galapagos islands and thence to the Easter islands. Borneo, the Solomon islands, the Fiji islands and India will come next.

Seized as Companion of Robber Killed at Cafe

The police yesterday arrested a suspect in the holdup of a restaurant at 509 North Franklin street Friday night when one of the three robbers was slain. The man in custody is Roy Hansen, 19 years old, 1745 North Artesian avenue. Louis Kainz, 19 years old, 1289 Clybourn avenue was the slain robber. He was shot to death by Policeman Edward Lynn, of the Chicago avenue station. Lynn drew his gun and fired while Kainz held up the proprietor of the place and several patrons with a sawed off shotgun.

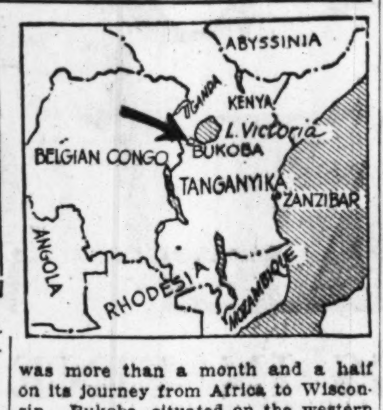
This letter received by the Rev. Father M. P. Smits, St. Joseph's rectory, New Franken, Wis.



From the little known town of Bukoba, in the Tanganyika territory of German East Africa, comes today's interesting letter. It was written by one of the White Fathers in charge of a seminary there for native students, and, according to the recipient, was more than a month and a half on its journey from Africa to Wisconsin. Bukoba, situated on the western shore of Victoria Nyanza or Lake Victoria, is one of the beauty spots of the territory. The terrain is rugged, and the modern buildings of the seminary and the bungalows of the Europeans are a strong contrast to the thatched huts of the natives.

DISPENSARY OF NEW HOSPITAL TO OPEN ON SEPT. 1

Progress on the remodeling of the old Lakota hotel, which will be known on its completion as the Lewis Memorial hospital, has reached a state where the dispensary that constitutes one of its principal departments will be opened on Sept. 1. The institution, which will be operated as a maternity hospital for Catholic mothers, will be under the direction of the Chicago archdiocese. Frank J. Lewis is the donor.

Future patients of the hospital will be enrolled at the dispensary beginning Sept. 1, for prenatal care and instruction. Several members of the Sisters of Providence of Montreal, who will have charge of the hospital, have arrived in Chicago to take up the work and receive the first patients in the dispensary, although the hospital proper will not be ready for some time. The best of medical care for expectant mothers will be provided and the most modern of equipment and architectural features will be introduced into the building.

40,000 FAMISHED COAL MINERS FLEE RUSSIAN FIELDS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

RIGA, Latvia, Aug. 16.—The desertion of 40,000 workers from the Russian Donnetz coal mines during the last three months, coupled with the steady fall in production, threatens the soviet trade monopoly with a loss of the Mediterranean coal market. The soviets were selling thousands of tons annually to Italy, Greece, Turkey, and Egypt.

The council of labor and defense has decreed the mobilization of another 10,000 Ukrainian poor peasants, who will follow the first contingent into the Donnetz basin to replace the deserting miners, who are wandering into other industrial districts seeking food.

Famine in the Donntz district has resulted in the arrest by cheka agents of coöperative officials, accused of sabotage in the delivery of provisions. Ten, according to the Moscow Pravda, because of lack of evidence, received sentences ranging from two to three years in concentration camps. The miners, according to the Pravda's reports, have been hungering for several weeks.

RESCUES WOMAN IN BLAZING FLAT; WINS HERO PRIZE

Fireman Patterson Gets $100 Award for July.

FIREMAN IS HERO

Fireman Malcolm Patterson.

In an early morning fire last month a probationary fireman, who had served only five months in the Chicago department, crawled through severe heat and dense smoke and rescued a woman resident on the third floor of an apartment building. Because his company was shorthanded, due to some of the men being on furlough, the fireman worked alone, which heightened the dangers of his feat.

The fireman is Malcolm T. Patterson of hook and ladder company 37, stationed at 5441 Lake Park avenue. Patterson, for his deed, has been awarded the $100 hero prize for the month of July by THE TRIBUNE.

A Story of Heroism.

The members of Patterson's company were called out at 5 a. m. on July 17 in response to an alarm at 5311-13 Blackstone avenue. When the firemen arrived the entrance, front stairs and hallway of the three story building were filled with flames, cutting off the escape of the residents in the front part of the structure.

Capt. Frank D. Rourke ordered ladders raised to the second and third floors of the building and the firemen began assisting two women and one man down from the second floor. In the meantime Patterson had been sent up a 36 foot ladder to the third floor to ventilate the building, which was burning from the bottom to the top.

As he reached the top of the ladder Patterson heard a moan from the interior of the building. The rooms into which he was looking were filled with smoke and he was unable to see any one. But without hesitation he thrust his way through the window and, crawling on his hands and knees so that he could breathe, he finally found a woman lying unconscious on the floor.

Carries Woman to Safety.

Patterson carried her back to the window and, placing her on his shoulder, took her down the ladder to the ground.

"The rescue was performed under dangerous conditions and at a great personal risk," said Capt. Rourke, who saw Patterson's deed.

In a report to the fire commissioner requesting mention for Patterson in the fire department general orders, John J. Costello, division marshal, praised the fireman and remarked that it was "strictly individual work."

Patterson disclaimed any particular credit for the rescue. "It was just a part of the day's work," he said.

Formerly a railroad employé, Patterson is 28 years old and lives at 7104 Ingleside avenue with his wife and two children. His probationary period in the fire department will be completed on Sept. 7.

Patrolman Peter F. Afeld of the Lawndale police station also was commended for bravery last month in a report sent to Acting Police Commissioner Alcock by Capt. John E. Ptacek. Afeld with two other policemen responded to a call from a clothing shop. Arriving at the place, two of the policemen went to the front and Afeld to the rear, where he noticed two men running away.

On Afeld's order to halt the two men turned and shot at him. Afeld returned the fire and took up the chase. He wounded and arrested one of the bandits and then with the aid of his two companions caught the other robber. Later the three policemen apprehended a third man involved in the robbery.

FISHING SCHOONER IS REPORTED SUNK WITH 16 ABOARD

New York, Aug. 16.—[Special.]—The Mackerel fishing schooner Kathleen, which usually carries a crew of sixteen, was mysteriously reported today to have sunk.

Information that the craft had disappeared was contained in a telegram signed by Charles Johnson, said to be a fishing boat captain and directed to Mrs. Kathleen Sturgis, wife of one of the crew. The message had been filed last night from a New York telegraph office.

About the same time Mrs. Sturgis received her message Mrs. Charles Lockie of Portsmouth, Va., a sister of Mrs. Sturgis's husband, E. L. Sturgis, reported as missing among the crew was reported to have received a wire stating that the Kathleen had sunk with all hands. No details were given in the message. It is thought that the telegram was sent by Capt. Johnson.

JIM DANDY, 100 TO 1, BEATS GALLANT FOX IN TRAVERS

WHICHONE PULLS UP LAME AFTER LIMPING HOME IN THIRD PLACE

30,000 See Defeat of Season's Best 3 Year Olds.

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 16.—A total stranger came pounding down the Saratoga track late this afternoon, flinging huge, packed divots into the masked countenance of the aristocratic Gallant Fox. A chestnut colt by the name of Jim Dandy don the Travers stakes, a prize worth $27,050 to the winner, by six lengths in an amazing race that left some 50,000 patrons in an exceedingly put-out condition.

SONNY WORKMAN.

Whichone, the other great 3 year old of the present season, was four lengths behind Gallant Fox, and when the horses turred back to the judges' stand after the race was run, it was seen that Whichone had gone to smash fighting Gallant Fox throughout the first mile of a mile and a quarter mile. The time was 2:08. Whichone's head was bobbing and the horse was limping like William T. Tilden in one of his dramatic defeats in the tennis tournaments.

Sonny Workman, the jockey, had dismounted and a couple of Negro hostlers were leading the colt gently back to the stand.

Rain Makes Track Gummy.

The track was rather gummy from fitful rains of the day. There was one other horse in the race to spare Whichone the humiliation of running last. This was Sun Falcon. Whichone outran him on three legs.

The bookmakers offered 100 to 1 on Jim Dandy, but it seems that few of the clients thought him worthy of an ironic dollar's worth. After the race an excited red faced man, with an Irish brogue, bustled along the press rows in the grandstand, exclaiming that Sam Rossoff, the New York subway contractor, had bet $1,000.

The Fox Odds On Favorite.

Ten minutes before the barrier was snapped, Jim Dandy was conceded to have no serious business on the track. His owner, Chaffe Earl, a young Californian, could not have felt optimistic himself, for at 100 to 1 a slight pressure of business would cause a cautious readjustment of the odds. Gallant Fox was the favorite at 1 to 2 and Whichone was quoted at 13 to 10.

The race was discussed in the papers, on the tracks, and in the teeming lobbies of the hotels on the big day of the season as a match race between the Fox and Whitney's Whichone. The other two, Jim Dandy and Sun Falcon, were just running as members of a modest ensemble, and of these two Sun Falcon was regarded as the better. His price was only 20 to 1.

There are about 30,000 patrons in the stand and on the lawns and scattered about the infield when the field of four went walking down the track past the assembly to the start. Earl Sande sat quietly on Fox's spine, inconspicuous in Woodward's silks, white with dots as big as pancakes.

At Post Few Seconds.

They walked quickly to the post. They were only there a few seconds, when the big garter snapped and the divots flew from their heels in a cloud.

The two contemptibles, Jim Dandy and Sun Falcon, leaped away with a showy charge, but of course, every one knew the Fox and Whichone would call them back when they settled down to serious running. Sonny Workman, in the light blue Whitney silks, stole a sidelong look at Sande, who was outside in the post position and was driving across in a rush for the rail. Workman held his course and rode nim off, and the pair of them soon moved out in front of Jim Dandy and Sun Falcon, where they could use plenty of track without any interference from horses bound nowhere.

At the first turn Whichone was leading by just enough to keep Gallant Fox out from the rail as Sande persistently tried to lift his horse past him. At the second turn, Sande's silks showed up plain against the rich green background of the groves, a little in front of Workman's pale blue, but still he couldn't get the Fox over onto the rail. At the far turn Jim Dandy began to intrude on the private feud between the two aristocrats, but their riders apparently ignored this coarse vulgarity and remained immersed in their close rivalry.

Jim Dandy Slides Through.

So the third horse slid through on the rail and kicked the yards behind him in tremendous agitation. When three of them straightened out and lit for home, there was this total stranger jumping along in front and Frank Baker, the jockey on him seemed to have armfuls of horse to squander.

The crowd's roar became a strange, incredulous cry. People who had been yelling "Come on, Fox" and "Come on, Whichone" lowered their field glasses, looked about them with puzzled expressions and inquired aloud of e h another "What the hell?"

Victory in Travers Stake Is Third in Jim Dandy's Life

Who is this horse Jim Dandy which beat Gallant oFx and Whichone in the Travers at Saratoga yesterday?

Jim Dandy is a son of Jim Gaffney, a noted horse in his day and even more famous as a muddy track performer. Jim Dandy's mother was Thunderbird, a daughter of Star Shoot. Star Shoot's daughters have produced many winners and their sons and daughters all could run straight and true in the mud.

Jim Dandy was bred by W. S. Dudley of Kentucky and in his entire racing career he has won three races, including the Travers of yesterday.

Early in the spring of 1929 in Kentucky, after he had won his first race in Mr. Dudley's silks, there was spirited bidding for Jim Dandy. He looked like one of the good colts of the year. Chaffee Earl, 'teen age millionaire of California, who owned a one horse stable consisting of Naishapur, outbid the other prospective buyers and bought Jim Dandy for something like $30,000.

The deal was closed early one morning, two days before the running of the Kentucky Derby. That afternoon the youthful Mr. Earl watched Jim Dandy go to the post wearing his silks. In the same field was a malden 2 year old which answered to the name of Gallant Knight. In the race that followed Gallant Knight gave Jim Dandy a sound beating.

Jim Dandy went into the Grand Union Hotel stakes in August of last year and, with the track muddy, won the prize at odds of 50 to 1. From that day until in the Travers yesterday he did not taste victory. The nearest he came to it was a third in an overnight handicap at Agua Caliente last March 28, when Seth's Hope and Brown Wisdom beat him.

HEINIE MEINE ILL; QUITS BUCS FOR REST OF SEASON

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Henry Meine, right handed pitcher of the Pittsburgh Pirates, left the club today because of ill health and announced that he was "through for the season at least."

"My health is more important than baseball and it is just about gone," Meine said after a conference with club officials. He said he would go to St. Louis, Mo., and later would have his tonsils removed.

Meine's action was one of a series of blows suffered by the Pirate pitching staff this season. Glenn Spencer and Ervin Brame both are on the injured list at present. The Pirates were forced to call upon a recruit, Charlie Wood, for mound duty against Brooklyn in the first game today.

Stagg Celebrates 68th Birthday by Playing Tennis

Amos Alonzo Stagg, director of athletics at the University of Chicago since 1892, yesterday observed his 68th birthday by playing a tennis match with his youngest son, Paul, a quarter back on the Maroon football team.

A. A. STAGG.

Stagg, who has coached football every year since he joined the Chicago faculty, is planning a few new tricks to give his athletes when they report for practice Sept. 15.

"Retire? I hadn't thought of it. I feel fit enough to go on coaching for another 38 years," Stagg said.

Stagg is the oldest active college athletic coach in America. He was born on Aug. 16, 1862, and spent the early years of his life at West Orange, N. J. He entered Yale in 1884 and pitched the Blue nine to five successive baseball championships. He was named at end on Walter Camp's 1889 all-American eleven.

The veteran Maroon leader as a single formula for keeping young.

"The body is a machine and you must understand your machine to keep it fit. I understand mine and don't abuse it with tobacco, alcohol, caffein or other poisons, and I exercise to keep the machine functioning properly," he said.

18,000 Watch Filly Capture $10,000 Race

BY FRENCH LANE.

Lady Broadcast, that proud racing filly from Nashville, which has been trying to win a stake race all year, finally did it at Hawthorne yesterday in the $10,000 added Chicago Business Men's handicap at a mile and a sixteenth.

The lady, a daughter of Messenger-Couscous, carrying the white and green jacket of Rogers Caldwell, Nashville sportsman, raced to an easy triumph, beating My Dandy by six lengths. Uncommon Gold, a field horse, was third. A nose back in fourth place came Islam with Beaming Over fifth. Five others in the field of 13 came up crowding and pushing and were only noses apart. In last place came Victorian, winner of the $100,000 Agua Caliente handicap, shut off at the start and never able to display any of his old time speed.

Winner Pays $19.74.

A crowd of 18,000 watched Lady Broadcast gallop to her victory, and she scored it so handily that even those who did not bet on her cheered her. The entry of My Dandy and Brown Wisdom was the favorite, Victorian was second choice and the field the third choice. Lady Broadcast paid $19.74 to win, $7.10 to place and $4.78 to show. My Dandy was at $4.92 to place and $3.70 to show and the field paid $3.36 to show.

Lady Broadcast, a notorious bad actor at the post, was led out to her stall in the Bahr gate ten minutes before the rest of the big field paraded to the post. When they got to the post, the old rogue Display tried to delay the start, but he was soon headed into his stall and moved up to the barrier like an educated post performer. With all the others in perfect alignment, Morrisey gave them the signal to go a half minute after they had been at the post.

The start was good, but Victorian and Paul Bunyan seemed to have been so surprised at the quick getaway that they didn't do much running up to the clubhouse turn. My Dandy rushed to the front, Brown Wisdom raced up to second place and Lady Broadcast was third.

Brown Wisdom Quits.

They ran down the back stretch in that order, Brown Wisdom then showed the distress signal, dropping back when Lady Broadcast took after My Dandy. When Brown Wisdom quits he does a good job of it. Jockey Garner tried to rally him, but he dropped back and back until he was next to last. The only horse he was able to beat was Victorian, which is a cripple and could not have done any better under any condition.

Lady Broadcast's winning rally came at the head of the stretch. When she started this drive, it was all over but the shouting and collecting. My Dandy hung on stubbornly and was the best of the others. Uncommon Gold and Islam finished close together, but the placing judges gave Uncommon Gold third place.

It was a truly run race and Lady Broadcast was much the best. As a 3 year old filly last year, only Rose of Sharon was able to beat her. Right now it seems doubtful if any filly in the country can take her measure at weight for age. She was ridden by J. Marcum and carried only 104 pounds, while My Dandy picked up 122 pounds.

Suitor Wins Windy City.

In the Windy City claiming stakes carrying $5,000 in added money, Suitor, running in the blue and white jacket of Edward J. Lehmann of Chicago, was the winner by a head over the fast finishing Miss Bess. The latter was the fourth favorite in a row to mow in defeat. Suitor, ridden by Jockey F. Halbert, always was prominent, took the lead in the stretch and never gave it up, although Miss Bess, with a stronger ride than W. Day gave her, might have reversed the decision. In the mutuels Suitor paid $10.28. The race was at a mile and a sixteenth.

The placing judges missed one as the program opened and gave the decision at the end of the mile and three-sixteenth's journey to the favorite, J. A. Weil. It looked as if Fort Dearborn, racing for the Nash brothers of Chicago, got up to beat J. A. Weil by a head.

The crowd voiced its disapproval with boos and hisses. For a while it looked as if the placing judges would have to retreat to the infield.

Fort Dearborn Carried Wide.

Sir John K. had been the early leader, but on the last turn J. A. Weil ran past him. So did Fort Dearborn and Vanquish midway in the stretch. Fort Dearborn, while being carried wide by J. A. Weil, got his nose in front. To everybody directly on the line, except the placing judges, it appeared as if he was increasing his advantage as they flew past the line of finish. Vanquish moved up on the inside and was third.

London Stenographer Swims Hellespont

ISTANBUL, Turkey, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Mercedes Gleitz, London stenographer, today swam across the Hellespont at its broadest section in 2 hours and 45 minutes. The English girl, who swam the English channel in October, 1927, had to struggle against a strong current. She went from the Asiatic to the European side. She will try to swim back across the Hellespont in the opposite direction tomorrow.

35,000 SEE 1ST DAY'S PROGRAM IN POLICE GAMES

Run Central A. A. U. Finals Today.

BY WILFRID SMITH.

Chicago's best went on parade yesterday at Soldiers' field in the opening performance of the ninth annual police games. Despite sultry weather and gray skies which threatened rain, 35,000 came to applaud as the policemen of the city and south parks forces demonstrated their athletic fitness in drills and sports.

This afternoon at 2:30 o'clock the show moves to a conclusion and more than 75,000 are expected to watch the final events. Beginning this morning at 9 o'clock the remaining championship events of the Central A. A. U. track and field meet will be held, the final races being scheduled as part of the second day's program of the police entertainment. Three events of the C. A. A. U. were held yesterday.

From the time the police band played the national anthem and then headed the parade of officials and contestants, until the mounted squads staged their races, nearly three hours later, there was no halt in the activities.

Mass Drill Opens Meet.

First, all contestants engaged in massed physical drill, the hundreds of participants covering the entire arena as they followed the cadence of the band through a set program. Exhibition drills by the mounted force and by the patrolmen engaged the attention of the spectators in the center of the stadium, while the sprinters went to their marks in the trials of the 100 yard handicap dash, which were held both on straightaway courses.

William Smith of district 29, with a handicap of one foot, came through the eight preliminary heats and semifinals to win the championship. Korzyk of district 36 was second, with Maloney, traffic, and McNamara, district 3, finishing third and fourth, respectively. Smith's time in the final race was 10 3-5 seconds.

The quarter mile handicap was won by Dullamaria of district 39 with an advantage of 21 yards. He was followed to the tape by Walsh of district 20, Vinicky of the south parks, and Bibby of district 25.

The other individual event, the half mile walk, was won by the veteran from the Fortieth district, Tigerman, who holds the record for the event. His time was 3 minutes 46 5-10 seconds.

The team events aroused greater interest, the districts and sections cheering their representatives as they vied for supremacy in the 440 yard relays, the half mile relays, tug of war, push ball games, chariot races, and shuttle contests.

South Wins Cycle Polo.

These preliminaries determined that the north section will meet the north central in the shuttle relay this afternoon; north and south will fight it out for the tug of war championship; and north and north central go into the finals of the pushball contests, while north and north central remain in the chariot races.

South defeated north in the motorcycle polo game, 6 goals to 1.

Exhibitions of motorcycle riding, first by individuals and later by groups, shared the spectators' interest with the exhibiting of "Fighting Crime," staged by the detective bureau. The popping of the repeating shotguns, culminating in the final dash to the cottage where the "criminals" had taken refuge at the south end of the stadium, and the capture of the fugitives after a barrage of tear gas bombs, was a vivid reproduction of Chicago's preparedness to fight crime.

Betty Robinson Wins 100.

Betty Robinson of the Illinois Women's Athletic club, Olympic 100 yard champion, won yesterday's exhibition race. She equalled her 1928 mark made at Amsterdam when she won the century in 11 seconds.

Ralph Metcalfe, former Tilden High school star, won the 220 yard dash in the C. A. A. U. meet. The Negro

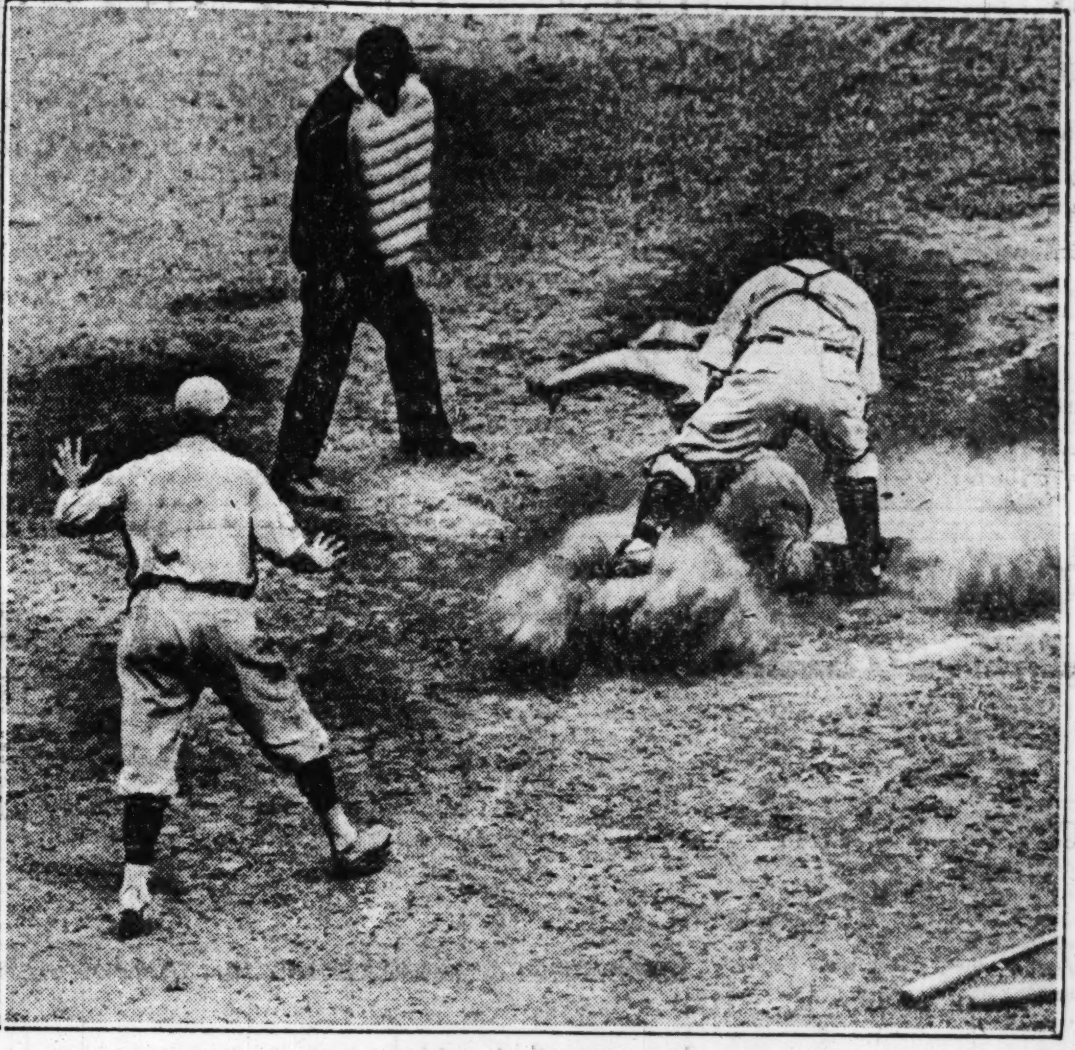
THE CAPTAIN FALLS, BUT THE CUBS CHARGE ON



Chuck Klein, hard hitting Philly outfielder, scores in the seventh inning during which the last place trouble makers scored eight times and took the lead from the Cubs in the first game. Klein came in on Whitney's second hit of the inning, but had to slide to get Umpire Scott's decision. O'Doul, who preceded Klein home, is at the left.

FETZ RALLIES TO BEAT LUCAS FOR CITY GOLF TITLE

BY HOWARD BARRY.

Gus Fetz won the city amateur golf championship by defeating Barney Lucas of Los Angeles, 1 up, in the 36 hole final yesterday at Jackson park. Gus fought the gamest battle of his career to snatch victory in the closing stages after he was three down at the end of 27 holes. He squared the match on the 33d, took the lead on the 34th and halved the last two. A stymie cost Lucas the hole which decided the match.

Both players showed remarkable coolness when the conditions under which they were performing are taken into consideration. They were forced to play golf before a gallery of 8,000 which resembled an unruly prize fight crowd, and they were further handicapped by the hubbub of officials and policemen.

Sportsman in Defeat.

In depeat the Los Angeles player lived up to the standards of sportsmanship which he had established earlier in the tournament when he had called a stroke on himself and lost a hole because he had moved the ball while addressing it, though no one had seen him do it.

The turning point of the match came on the 33d hole. Lucas had seen his commanding lead dwindle until now he was only one up. He hooked his drive off the fairway, but still was within reach of the green with an iron shot. But he looked up as he swung and topped the ball.

Fetz saw his big chance and proved equal to it. He laid his second on the green and won with a 4. That squared the match.

Stymie Decides Match.

On the next hole both reached the green in 2, but on his second putt Lucas was faced with a dead stymie. He tried to jump the ball with his niblick, but failed. That was where the match was decided, for Gus won the hole with a 4.

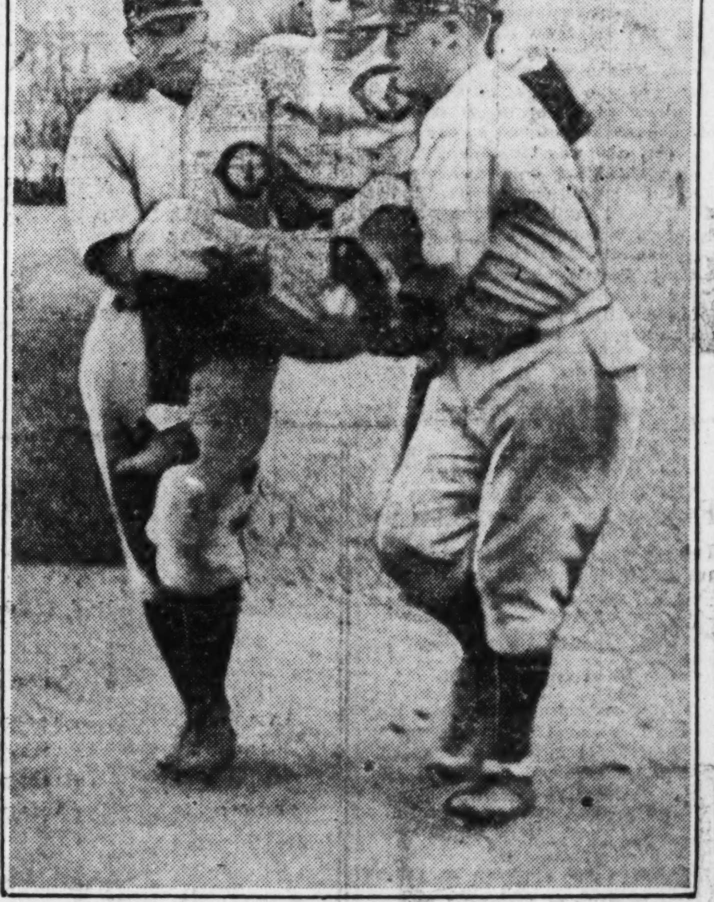
After the 35th was halved 4s, Lucas made a fine bid on the final hole. His 18 foot putt for a birdie stopped 2 inches from the cup.

Lucas was 2 up on Fetz at the end of the morning round and went to 3 up when Gus missed a 2 foot putt on the 19th. Fetz took the 21st when Lucas three putted and won the 24th, also after his opponent had topped his drive. A shot out of bounds cost Gus the 26th, and he three putted the 27th to go 3 down.

Bitter Duel in First Flight.

Then he began his comeback. He took the 28th by sinking a seven footer, and on the 31st he became only 1 down when Lucas three putted. The Los Angeles player's topped approach cost him the 33d, and the stymie on the 34th proved the deciding factor.

The fight for the first flight championship was waged with equal bitterness. Jim Bushong of Portland, Ore., beat Paul Smith of Lincolnshire, one up. After being four down at the end of 27 holes, Smith won four in a row. Then Bushong took the 32d with a 20 foot putt for a birdie and went 1 up. They halved the remaining holes, both sinking 25 foot putts for birdies on the home green.



Charley Grimm's teammates carry him off the field after he was spiked by Lefty O'Doul in the first inning of the second game. The stretcher corps is composed of Schulte, Malone and Bush.

BRUINS RALLY TWICE IN 9TH TO OVERTAKE PHILS

Wilson Clouts 41st Homer in 1st Game.

The Cubs gained on one National league rival yesterday, but lost ground to another. They are leading the Robins by two and a half games and are three ahead of the Giants. New York picked up half a game on the leaders and Brooklyn slipped back half a game.

BY EDWARD BURNS.

It remained for the miserable tail-end Phillies to come to the town with the biggest and best baseball show that has been staged at Wrigley field in many a season.

Almost everything in the realm of baseball was offered in the double header yesterday, the first game of which was won in the ninth by the Cubs, 10 to 9, and the second of which went to a 3 to 3 tie, the Cubs' three coming with two out and two strikes on English in the ninth. A balk scored Beck, then English drove in Farrell with a homer. Two innings of air-tight ball followed, and the umpires called a halt on account of darkness.

Here's Day's Inventory.

Because so much happened, wouldn't it be a good idea to hold an inventory of the whole afternoon's doings and list it right here?

1. Kiki Cuyler tripled with two on in the first inning of the first game to start off the big riot.
2. Hack Wilson made his 41st homer of the year with Cuyler on in the third inning of the first game.
3. Blair knocked a homer with two on in the sixth inning of the first game.
4. The Phillies shelled Teachout and Bush for seven hits and eight runs to give the visitors a 9 to 8 lead in the seventh inning of the first game.
5. English, Wilson and Hartnett delivered singles in the ninth of the first game to tie, then win, for the Cubs.
6. Fred Blake allowed two hits in the seven innings he pitched in the second game, yet was losing, 3 to 0, when he retired for a pinch batter. Nelson pitched two innings and allowed no hits, and Malone pitched two innings and allowed no hits. And the Phils lead both leagues in hitting.
7. The Phils blotted out Cub rallies in the sixth, seventh and eighth innings with nifty double plays.
8. Malone struck out two batsmen in his first inning as a relief pitcher, the tenth, and Collins, who put out the fire in the big Cub ninth, struck out the side in the tenth.

Balk Scores Run.

9. Willoughby's balk was a gesture toward first, which allowed Beck to score the first Cub run.
10. English knocked his homer into the right field stand, with a count of three balls and two strikes. Farrell was on second, where he had gone on Willoughby's balk.
11. There were four hours and 43 minutes of baseball and not a boresome second during the stretch. It was the noisiest crowd this observer has ever heard, including world series. Though the season hasn't arrived there were profuse straw hat showers in the ninth inning of each game.

Of course we could go on and on with this inventory, but those are the outstanding individual items.

Now we'll tell you that Capt. Charles Grimm,, who was hurt in the first game, was spiked in the first inning of the second game and was taken to the Masonic hospital, where six stitches were taken in the calf of his left leg. He left last night for his home in St. Louis to remain for five or six days, it was said.

Tolson Starts Off Wrong.

Tolson will serve in Charley's place and yesterday got off to a bad start by an unbelievable bit of wool gathering which led to the production of the Phils' third run. Charley chased Umpire Jorda with the ball in his hand. He didn't even tag the umps, but while he was making the attempt Lefty O'Doul ran from second to third, whence he scored on a sacrifice fly. The run never would have counted but for the senator's lapse, and the episode set the wolves to howling.

The gathering yesterday lifted the total attendance for the week which closed yesterday to 243,600, a new record. President Veeck yesterday announced the actual paid attendance for the Brooklyn series as 129,100, the actual paid attendance of last Sunday's double header as a few more than 44,000, and the total paid for the week as 207,000.

The tie of yesterday will be played off as a part of a double header Tuesday and single games will be played this afternoon and tomorrow.

Here Are Ninth Innings.

The effect of the day on the league race was, of course, the same as though but one game had been played. The Cubs gained a half game on the Robins and lost a half game to the Giants. They are leading the Robins by 2½ games and the Giants by three games.

There doesn't seem to be much room left for play by play detail but you

ROBINS, PIRATES DIVIDE.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Ray Kremer's stellar hurling in the second game of a double bill gave Pittsburgh a split with the Brooklyn Robins today. The Pirates won, 6 to 2, after losing the first, 7 to 5. The big Frenchman, who hung up his sixteenth victory of the season, hurled shutout ball for eight innings, easing up in the ninth, when the Robins scored two markers.

Brooklyn took advantage of Wood's wildness in the opener.

really should have further particulars of those two ninth inning rallies:

First game, score, 9 to 8, in favor of the Phillies—English singled past Hurst. Cuyler waited for a base on balls. Wilson singled sharply to right, scoring English with the run that tied and putting Cuyler on third. Dan Taylor grounded to Thompson, who made an unsuccessful attempt to catch Cuyler off third and that filled the sacks. Grimm forced Cuyler at the plate, Friberg to Rensa but Hartnett pounded a single past Whitney, driving Wilson across with the winning run.

Second game, score, 3 to 0, in favor of the Phillies—Stephenson batted for J. Taylor and singled to right center. Beck was put on to run for Stevie. Farrell waited for four bad ones and took first. Hartnett batted for Nelson and sent a long sacrifice fly to Brickell which let Beck go to third. Blair popped to Thompson back on the grass. Willoughby then committed a balk, when he stepped off the rubber to throw to Hurst in an effort to catch Farrell and found no one covering first and was forced to hold the ball, Beck being ordered home and Farrell to second on the balk. English then waited until he had a 3 and 2 count on Willoughby and rammed the next one into the right field bleacher, scoring Farrell ahead of him and tying the score. Cuyler singled to left, but Wilson flied to Brickell to end the inning.

SOX HOLD YANKS SCORELESS, THEN RAIN APPEARS

So There'll Be Pair of Games Today.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—The White Sox can't get a break. For three innings this afternoon they held the mauling Yankees scoreless, which for the Chicagoans is more than an everyday feat. But they'll not receive any credit for so doing. Rain came along and washed everything into the discard, including a few hits which had been collected off Fred Ruffing and Alphonse Thomas. As a result of the postponement there will be two games tomorrow at the Stadium.

The appearance of the rain was regreeable if for no other reason than that it halted an interesting experiment involving Thomas. The Baltimore boy never has been able to annoy the Yanks and this year hasn't annoyed anybody else. But today it looked as if he might drive away two jinxes with one blow.

May Face Yanks Again.

In three innings Thomas gave only two hits, these being singles by Combs and Ruth in the first session. In the two other innings he was about as efficient as a man could be. On the strength of this display he will be given another chance against the Yanks before the Sox go away.

Among those who lost hits because of the downpour was Carl Reynolds, who is beginning to suspect there is some sort of a plot against him. Reynolds, even though handicapped by a charley horse, was dragged into action today because Manager Bush is more or less desperate for hitters.

The young man marked his return by hitting safely through short in the first inning. But that hit joins a lot of others made by Reynolds, hence his suspicions of a plot. He now has been robbed of eight hits in ten times at bat, all lost in games that failed to go five innings. In one wet afternoon at Philadelphia, he lost three in three times up. One of the three was a homer.

Revises Batting Order.

Jolley also lost credit for a hit this afternoon. He singled to center with one out in the fourth. A moment later Umpire Geisel, the Beau Brummell of the guessing party, decided he had better get in out of the rain.

Besides putting Reynolds in the lineup today Manager Bush gave his batting order a jolt. This, of course, is almost a daily occurrence, Bush's theory being that one combination couldn't possibly be worse than the other and that he might happen onto a winning arrangement. The latest had Cissell batting second, Clancy was dropped to seventh. Fothergill wasn't even present. The explanation is that he had a troublesome leg.

The pitching for tomorrow is subject to change, but Bush, after an early evening huddle with himself, declared in favor of Lyons and Faber. If Lyons can win, it will mark his eighteenth of the season and if Faber can do the same he will be able to boast of three straight. Pennock and Wells are the Yanks candidates.

BIG SIX BATTING WEAK, BUT TERRY HOLDS 1ST PLACE

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Baseball's Big Six had another bad day for the batting averages yesterday despite numerous opportunities to hit. Bill Terry did the greater part of the hitting, collecting three hits in nine times at bat, but his average dropped two points to .410. Babe Herman managed to hold his average at .400 with two hits in six trips to the plate and took an undisputed hold on second place as Chuck Klein's mark fell off five points to .395. Klein hit only twice in eight times up.

In the American league division, rain put Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig out of action before they had played in a legal game, but Gehrig broke his tie with Al Simmons for the lead as the Philadelphian failed to connect in four times at bat and fell off three points to .380.

FROSTY PETERS FILES $23,900 DAMAGE SUIT

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Charging breach of contract, Frosty Peters, former University of Illinois football star, yesterday filed suit in Superior court here for $23,900 damages against the Olympic club and 3,000 "John Does," members here of the Shrine.

Peters' complaint said he was a "football player of great and unusual ability, enjoying nation-wide reputation." He charged the defendants broke a contract to find a job for him while he played football for them here.

The suit alleged an agreement to get Peters a job with such hours he could continue his education and also participate in spring practice. He said he relied on their promises and left Illinois university four months before he would have been graduated.

Peters charged he lost another opportunity to play professional football last season at a salary of $3,500 for the season, and spent $400 for transportation and expenses here.

Home Girl Gives Innocent Critic Piece of Her Mind

BY EDWARD BURNS.

A bundle of letters has just arrived at our desk which has inspired us to write a piece about that weekly social event, ladies' day at Wrigley field.

It seems that in mentioning ladies' day in an account of one of the recent Friday Cub games we referred (and quite innocently) to the "lady crashers." We know now that we shouldn't have made this crack.

We have read all these letters and have selected one from one of the girls that we assume to be a demure little miss, perhaps typical and perhaps not typical of the 17,500 ladies who are Mr. Wrigley's guests every Friday the Cubs are at home. Here's the letter:

Mr. Wrigley's a Generous Man, See!

"Sir: I have read your dirty dig in which you refer to the ladies who go to the Cubs' games on Friday as 'crashers,' and I am hastening to give you a piece of my mind.

"Now, the questions I want to ask is what the hell difference does it make to you if Mr. Wrigley is a generous man and is kind enough to give away thousands of tickets each week to women and girls who might otherwise be deprived of attending any games whatsoever?

"I have taken the trouble to check up on you and find you are a fat old bachelor and that you are not only a woman hater but kick at children when you see the little tots romping in the street.

"Mr. Wrigley lets you in his ball park free of charge and you take up more room than a whole detachment of Camp Fire Girls, yet this is all right, to your way of thinking. One Girl Scout, with her daily act of kindness, spreads more sunshine in one week than you have radiated in your whole life.

Would Like to Compare Him with Big Hearted Man.

"I would like to have your picture so I can contrast the hard lines of your face with the generous countenance of Mr. Wrigley, a big hearted man who is bringing real thrills to hundreds of poor but deserving women. [Signed.] A HOME GIRL."

We want to say right now that we are greatly grieved at what A HOME GIRL has to say. It is true that we are a bachelor and are a little overweight, but all the rest is false. We are not a woman hater and we love little children if their hands aren't sticky and the tiny rascals don't make too much noise when we're concentrating.

To use HOME GIRL'S own words, what the hell difference DOES it make to us if Mr. Wrigley is a generous man, etc., etc.?

Women Guests Are Learning the Game.

We'll admit that several years ago, when the ladies' day idea first got big, the gals struck us as being utterly silly in their appreciation of what was going on before them on the baseball field.

Formerly, and you know it, girls, it was the custom of the ladies' day guests to screech and clap hands at every foul ball and every pop fly.

The guests revealed no fewer than ten thousand times during the afternoon that they had no conception of what was going on and that probably the only reason they were away from the house was to duck the sight of the ironing board.

But how different are the Friday guests of the present! No longer do they applaud at the wrong time. No longer do they mistake the umpires for ushers.

Perhaps Bill Will Bar All Men Next Season.

We think it is a shame that Mr. Wrigley found it necessary to limit the number of guests to 17,500 just because 30,000 to 35,000 of them weekly were crowding out 10,000 to 15,000 customers who wanted to get in and couldn't. Mr. Wrigley is baseball's leading exponent of the ladies' day idea. More than 60,000 free tickets were sought for the Robins-Cubs game last Friday, the first day requests were receivable. We know that Mr. Wrigley was sad because there wasn't room for the 60,000 in addition to the number of cash customers who were there.

Maybe next season, after Mr. Wrigley has made a lot of money out of the world series this fall, Fridays will be for LADIES ONLY. This is not a snooty suggestion. We think it would be a swell idea and a jolly time would be had by all.

If this goes through we're going to suggest that the players appear before and after the games in street clothes and autograph programs. This would eliminate the necessity of jamming and milling around the clubhouse as at present.

But there's one thing we want to tell HOME GIRL. We park our auto under that clubhouse runway and if we find our paint job gouged we'll know she did it. And we'll sue to the limit of the law!

FIGHT SITUATION.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The Wake presents the heavyweight fight situation which confronted Promoter Mique Malloy when he came here this week to secure for Chicago the Sharkey-Carnera bout as a September attraction. It still is the situation, for that matter.

Max Schmeling, champion by virtue of the foul committed by Jack Sharkey in their June bout, will not fight in this country until next June. He is bound to appear under Madison Square Garden sponsorship by a contract declared flaw proof. Managerial complications will have expired by that time. Joey Jacobs, who directed his campaign against the Bostonian, now holds a binding contract as manager of future appearances.

Jacobs wishes Schmeling to engage in two or three bouts on the side, to prevent Max from becoming ring rusty. These bouts, if held, will not be against Stribling, Sharkey, Campolo or any of the first flighters. His opponents will be what are known in ring parlance as "bambinos." Whether the Garden will interpose objections is not known. Sometimes even "bambinos" young and strong, even if clumsy, do the unexpected. Schmeling, with his title, is an asset on which the Garden firm expects to realize in black ink.

With Schmeling out until next spring, there are four present contenders for the privilege of a shot at his title. They are Sharkey, Stribling, Carnera and Campolo. Carnera qualifies because he has been exploited until he figures as a drawing card. How well he can fight is still a question, but he gained friends by his showing against Godfrey. His size, if he has anything else, makes him formidable.

Campolo possibly might not register in this quarter except for his chaperonage. The Garden firm is currently reported to have paid a sum well into five figures for exclusive right to his services. Naturally, being a business institution, it wants to get its money back. Campolo is rather slow finding openings, but counters well and has a terrific punch.

Jack Sharkey for several years has furnished bouts reeking with fouls. He has many of the attributes a champion should have, but they seem to leave him in the ring. He fouled Phil Scott at Miami and won the bout and he fouled Schmeling here in June and lost his chance for the title. Because he had a clear lead over Schmeling on points at the time of the foul, he still is in the running.

Young Stribling blossomed forth when he discarded his former caution and stopped 'Von Porat' in Chicago, then stopped Phil Scott in London. His two matches with Carnera abroad, won and lost respectively on fouls, left him with no fear of the giant Italian.

Promoter Malloy came east with Carnera's promise to meet any suitable opponent. Now the Garden also wants a stellar bout for September. Carnera, however, is under ban of the New York commission because of that Pacific coast episode with Paul Chevalier. The edict was too recent to allow just yet that convenient lifting of the ban which made the Schmeling-Sharkey bout possible. Such things take a little more time. So Carnera is out in New York and Stribling still is uncertain.

That left Sharkey as the one sure available candidate against Campolo here. The Garden is through with guarantees during the present business depression. It doubts whether any bout will draw what it normally should. Sharkey's recent bouts all have been under Garden auspices and he has earned much money thereby. He has promised to make his next appearance for the Garden on Sept. 29 against Campolo.

When the Boston party asked $100,000 guarantee with a percentage privilege from Malloy, Mique promised it. He was asked to place the sum in the bank. Mique frankly said he didn't have it, but would get it. Manager Buckley for Sharkey liked his frankness. In fact, Malloy's unwily western ways created such an impression among local sports writers accustomed to braggadocio and imaginary large sums of money that he was the subject of columns of comment.

The Garden is on the lookout for a "natural" at Miami in February, and the winner of that bout would meet Schmeling in New York next June. That is the heavyweight situation.

This Wake is conducted by Harvey T. Woodruff. Help! Help!

ALLEGED AGENT FOR HORSE RACE LOTTERY JAILED

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Elmer Allen, Saratoga avenue, Cleveland, O., said by police to be an eastern agent for a horse race lottery run by a Quebec veterans' organization, was arrested here today along with Michael McCarroll, an assistant fire marshal of this city. McCarroll said he had been employed by Allen as a bookkeeper for a week.

Allen is charged with setting up and maintaining a lottery and McCarroll with aiding and abetting him.

Police said they found a large number of lottery tickets in Allen's room at a hotel. A letter was found in one of the grips, police said, from George Sarles, E. 219th street, Cleveland, appointing Allen as a representative. According to Capt. Lee of the vice squad, Allen is the representative in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, and Washington for the lottery.

Detroit threatened in the sixth when Stone and Easterling walked after Alexander had doubled, but Heinie Manush snuffed out the rally by making a running one handed catch of Desautel's long fly for the third out. Score:

Lipton Arrives on Fifth Quest for Yacht Cup

New York, Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Trim and erect, slightly tanned, and full of witty sallies, the world's most inveterate yachtsman arrived here today on the liner Leviathan to try for the fifth time in 31 years to do what he calls "take that old mug back where it belongs."

That is Sir Thomas Lipton's way of saying he hopes to win the America's cup, but today, amidst the blast of whistles, the shriek of sirens and the cheers of welcomers who went down the harbor on the yacht Macom to extend him the city's official greeting, he displayed no assurance that he would capture the classic trophy.

His contender, the Shamrock V., now in New London, Conn., is a "good boat," he told a radio audience stretching around the globe. He hopes that she will be succesful but, he concluded with the sportsmanship of a man who has seen yacht after yacht go down to defeat, "may the best boat win." If the Shamrock V. fails, neither five defeats nor his 80 years of age will bring discouragement. "If I lose I'll come back again as soon as possible," Lipton said.

BRITISH POLOISTS TO SEE U. S. TEAM PLAY TEST GAME

New York, Aug. 16.—[A. P.]—While the British team looks on, America's international polo squad will engage in another test match tomorrow for the purpose of naming an outfit to defend the Westchester cup in September.

America's first string team of Eric Pedley, No. 1; Earle Hopping Jr., No. 2; Capt. Tommy Hitchcock Jr., No. 3, and Winston Guest, back, will oppose the four composed of Elmer Boeseke, No. 1; Gerald Balding, No. 2; Cecil Smith, No. 3, and H. W. [Rube] Williams at back.

This match will be the supreme test for Hitchcock's team, a team which many believe to be the same as will ride against the British in the cup series. A strong showing for Pedley, Hopping, Hitchcock, and Guest will just about clinch their right to start against the invaders. The contest tomorrow is given added interest by the presence of Gerald Balding, probable No. 2 on the English team, in the American lineup. The British team hopes to engage in an easy pony game on Monday and begin real practice several days later.

ENGLAND TAKES LEAD IN BRITISH EMPIRE GAMES

Lord Burghley Breaks Record in Hurdles.

HAMILTON, Ont., Aug. 16.—(AP)—England's track and field forces, led by Lord Davis Burghley, the Olympic low hurdling champion, captured major honors today in the opening events of the British empire games. The stars of the empire meet will compete in the international games with the United States at Chicago on Aug. 27.

Lord Burghley, in characteristic style, contributed one of England's two individual victories when he romped over the 440 yard low hurdles to win and set a new Canadian record of 54 4-5 seconds.

England Sweeps Hurdles.

England swept the first four places in the hurdles, in addition to which S. E. Englehart won the 220 yard dash final, while English competitors placed second in the remaining two events concluded, the hop, step and jump and the six mile run.

Although no official points are awarded for the games, an unofficial tabulation, based on the Olympic system of ten points for first place, five for second, four for third, etc., would give England a total of 46 points for the four finals with Canada showing 28, and scattered points to New Zealand, Scotland, South Africa, and Newfoundland.

Two Records Broken.

Two records were broken and a third created in the four finals. In addition to Lord Burghley's hurdle mark, which displaced the former dominion record of 56 2-5 seconds set by J. Montabone of Montreal, the hop, step and jump standard was broken by the Canadian winner, Gordon Smallacombe of Toronto. His leap of 48 feet 5 inches displaced the old record of 47 feet 1½ inches made by J. G. MacDonald of Halifax in 1908.

W. J. Savidan scored for New Zealand by winning the six mile run in 30 minutes 49 4-5 seconds, which will be given recognition as a new Canadian record.

SPRINT TITLE AT STAKE

Who is the world's fastest sprinter? This question will come up for final settlement when the greatest field of sprinters ever assembled matches strides in a special 100 yard dash at the British Empire-United States track and field games at Soldiers' field the night of Aug. 27.

In this "century of centuries" a world champion will be crowned and a record is expected to be hung up. Both countries will present three of their greatest stars.

Heading the empire delegation will be Percy Williams, the Vancouver Express, winner of both dash events at the last Olympics, who a week ago was credited with stepping 100 meters in :10 3-10, which, if accepted, will be a world mark.

Tolan Tops U. S. Stars.

America's hopes rest largely on the sturdy legs of Eddie Tolan, the Negro speed artist from the University of Michigan, who in the last few months has scored convincing triumphs over most of the other United States stars, including Simpson, Bracey, Leland, Elder, and Bennett. Tolan holds the world record of :09.5.

Frank Wykoff, Southern California's great sprinter, holder of the national collegiate 100 yard dash title, may or may not compete in the race. Dean Cromwell, his coach, reports that the west coast star has been ill most of the summer, but that he may go east to compete in the national A. A. U. championships at Pittsburgh next week, at which time America's team for the empire meet will be selected.

In the event that Wykoff runs it appears as if the United States trio in the 100 yard sprint probably will include Tolan, Wykoff, and Simpson. And it will be hard to convince American track fans that there are any sprinters in the world who can master this trio.

See Williams Supreme.

However, the British are saying little but are thinking a lot. They expect Percy Williams to prove once more that he is unbeatable, just as he did at the Olympics at Amsterdam when, unheralded, he ran to victories over America's best.

In addition to Williams, the visitors will present stars whose past performances rank them with the other contenders. From South Africa comes Walter Legg, who placed fifth in the 100 meter run at Amsterdam and who is regarded as the dark horse in the coming clash.

New Zealand will enter a new star in the sprint firmament in A. J. Elliot, a husky youngster, who holds all the sprint records in the "down under" countries.

Two other Canadians, Leigh Miller and John Fitzpatrick, will make a strong bid for a place on the Empire sprint delegation. The former ran to victories over Simpson, Elder and other American sprint aces at the indoor meets in New York last winter while Fitzpatrick, a place winner in the 220 at Amsterdam, is rated by his countrymen as second only to Williams.

Relay Record Expected.

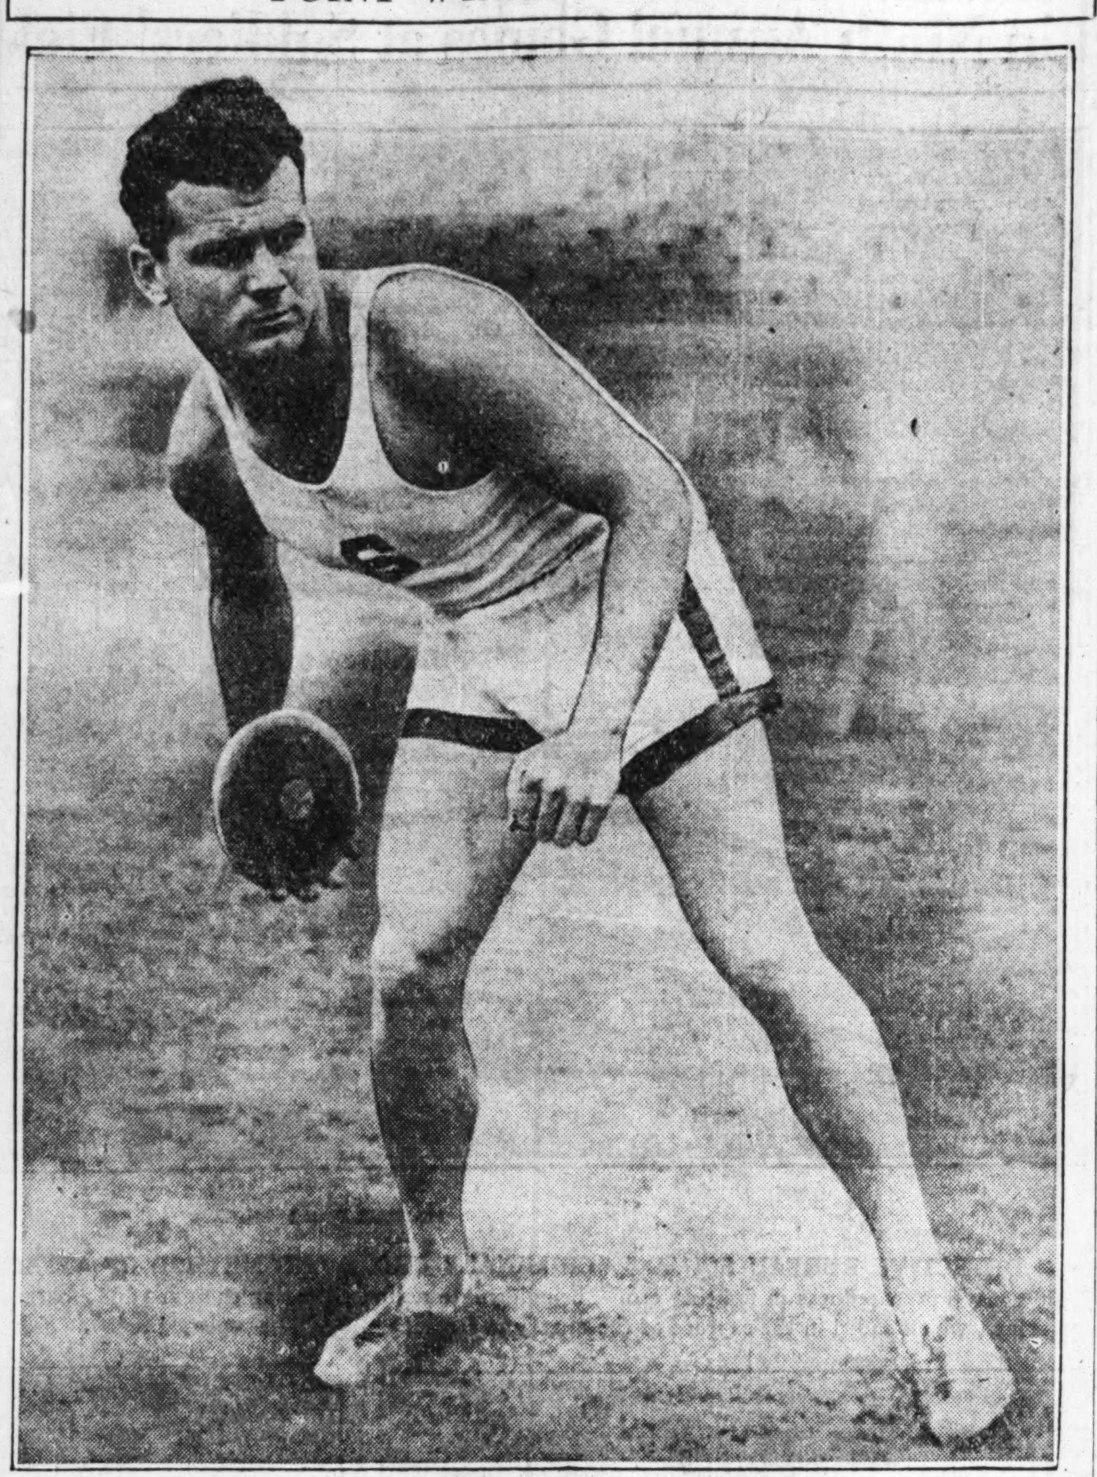
Besides running the special 100 yard dash, which will not count in the final score of the meet, the sprinters will engage in a 400 yard relay which will open the evening's program. The world record for this relay is almost certain to go by the boards with such stars as Tolan, Wykoff, Simpson, and Leland performing.

The Empire also is determined to annex this event and will pit an equally strong aggregation against the United States. The Americans won the 400 yard relay at the last meet between the two countries.

Coaches in charge of the Empire team already have intimated that while they will concede superiority to the Yankees in the six field events they expect to make a slam of the eight running events.

In the event that America captures the field events it must take two track events to win. This was the same situation which prevailed at Stamford Bridge in 1928 when the United States won, 8 to 6. Since that time, however, England and her dominions have progressed greatly in the track and field sport.

POINT WINNER FOR U. S.?



Eric Krenz, holder of the unofficial world record for the discus throw, is one of the athletes counted upon to help repel the British empire team at Soldiers' field, Aug. 27. Krenz will represent the Olympic club in the national A. A. U. championships at Pittsburgh, where he is expected to qualify for the right to compete in the international meet.

runner had little difficulty defeating the field in the excellent time of 21 9-10 seconds. Ivan Fuqua, high school star from Brazil, Ind., the individual point winner this spring in Stagg's interscholastic meet, and now representing the Pennsylvania R. R. club, was second. Allan East of the University of Chicago was third and Garke, University of Wisconsin, was fourth.

Sentman Wins Hurdles.

Lee Sentman, Illinois' hurdler, was an easy victor in the 120 yard high hurdles, defeating Bob Rodgers, his former team mate who now runs for the I. A. C., and Dexter Fairbank, the other entries.

Virgil Gist, former Maroon star, won the half mile run in 1 minute 55 2-10 seconds although he finished behind Orval Martin of Purdue university. Martin is training for the national A. A. U meet next week at Pittsburgh and the meet here Aug. 27 with the British Empire squad. However, he does not live in central association territory and was not eligible for the title.

"HOTSY TOTSY" SETS NEW MARK IN GOLD CUP RACE

Red Bank, N. J., Aug. 16.—(AP)—"Hotsy Totsy," for years the unlucky "stepchild" of the gold cup racing fleet, came into its own at last today.

The slim mahogany speed boat which caught fire at Greenwich in 1927 and failed to finish in its only other attempt, in 1926, roared over the placid surface of the Shrewsbury river this afternoon to set a new record average of 52.673 miles an hour for the 90 mile grind, run off in three 30 mile heats.

DENMARK CREW BEATS QUINCY 4 IN CLOSE FINISH

LIEGE, Belgium, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Crews from the United States broke even today in the semi-finals of the international rowing regatta. The eight-oared boat representing the Penn A. C. of Philadelphia advanced to the final by defeating France and gaining the post of favorite for the event.

In the four oared competition the crew from Quincy, Ill., was eliminated by Denmark in a sensationally close finish. All racese were over the Olympic distance of 2,000 meters, approximately one and one-quarter miles.

MALLOY TALKS OF PROMOTERS, BOXERS, SCRIBES

They Can't Stop Me, He Exclaims.

Week's Fight Results

At Chicago—Billy Petrolle knocked out Paddy Walthier [4].

At New York—Justo Suarez outpointed Herman Perlick [10].

At Indianapolis—George Kerwin outpointed Jimmy Lundy [10].

At Hollywood, Cal.—Bucky Lawless, Buffalo, outpointed Babe Anderson, San Jose, Cal. [10].

At San Francisco—Manuel Quintero, Tampa, Fla., outpointed Louie O'Neil, San Francisco [8].

At Duluth, Minn.—Charlie Retzlaff, Duluth, outpointed Leon "Bombo" Chevallier, Oakland, Cal. [6].

At Chicago—Eddie Shea, Chicago, knocked out Mickey Genaro, Waterbury, Conn. [2].

Mique Malloy's faith in the word of fighting men hasn't wavered in spite of recent disappointments. The Chicago promoter who slipped into New York and left under the impression that he had snatched one of the Garden's leading prize fight attractions still promises to do something big for his old home town.

Malloy left New York with the verbal acceptance of Jack Sharkey to fight Primo Carnera in Chicago on Sept. 29. While he was riding the rails home to find $100,000 to bind the match Sharkey had a change of heart and verbally accepted the Garden's terms to meet Vittorio Campolo at Yankee stadium Sept. 25.

"They can't stop me," Malloy said in his loop office yesterday, where he was making frantic efforts to reach Young Stribling and Sharkey on the telephone. "I am not sure that the Sharkey-Carnera match is off. I have had no notification except what I have read in the newspapers.

Wins New York Press.

"But what if Sharkey has taken a runout? I never have held that the fate of the universe hinges on an immediate and conclusive settlement of whether Carnera is a second rate heavyweight or Sharkey a chronic fouler out. I am told that there is some public clamor for a Stribling-Carnera bout, and I am wondering if it isn't actually the truth.

"There's no reason why Chicago can't outbid New York. I showed the Garden officials and those New York newspaper fellows that we know how to go after big game. Why, say, they flocked around me in greater numbers than they ever did Tex Rickard."

"Did you convince them that you could produce the $100,000 necessary to bind the match?" a reporter asked Mr. Malloy.

"It would take me only about two hours to get that dough," Mique explained. "What's $100,000 when you have a bout that will draw a million? I have plenty of wealthy friends who would jump at the chance to get in on a big gate like that.

Lawyers Give Him Pointers.

"And what's more, the boys who will back me stand ready to offer the winner of a Carnera-Stribling fight a championship match with Max Schmeling here next summer. That contract the Garden holds with Schmeling don't mean nothin'. It was a forced contract. My lawyers tell me forced contracts won't hold water."

Mr. Malloy did not explain how his lawyers accounted for the fact that the contract the Garden held with Jack Sharkey seemed to hold water.

Asked if he would sell out to the Chicago Stadium corporation if he landed Stribling for a match with Carnera, Malloy said:

"Why should I cut the Stadium in on a match which they lacked the initiative to go out and get? An organization with its capital ought to be out bidding with the New York Garden for big attractions. Instead, they leave it up to a guy like me to give Chicago boxing fans something to shout about."

BRITISH WOMAN WINS 880 YARD RACE IN 2:18 1-5

STAMFORD BRIDGE, England, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Miss G. Lunn, in winning the 880 yard run in the women's amateur athletic championships here today, set what is claimed to be a new world record of 2 minutes 18 1-5 seconds. She defeated Miss R. Christmas of London by eight yards.

[No official record for 880 yards in women's competition appears in the record books, but Frau Lina Radke of Germany set a world mark of 2:16 4-5 for 800 meters in the Olympics of 1928. This distance is about eight yards shorter than 880 yards.]

CLEVELAND FOUR WINS.

Toledo, O., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—The clever Kirkland Polo club of Cleveland defeated the Caranor team of Toledo in the first of a series of intercity games this afternoon, 9 to 5. Cleveland was given a two goal handicap.

Tolan's Success on Track Recalls Deeds of Negro Sports Stars of Other Days

Eddie Tolan's victories over George Simpson, Ohio State sprinter, in the summer track campaign have gained him revenge for his series of defeats during the collegiate season. More than this, they again have established the Negro star as one of America's greatest sprinters.

Tolan was slow rounding into form during the outdoor collegiate campaign. At no time did he approach his mark of 9 5-10 second for 100 yards, which was accepted as the world's best by the international federation last March at its meeting in Berlin. He was defeated by Simpson, Frank Wykoff and Ed Toppino in the national collegiate meet at Stagg field. Previously, Tolan had finished a poor second to Simpson in the Western conference meet at Evanston.

With a discouraging record in the spring relay carnivals, there were many who believed Tolan's world mark was a flash and did not compare with the more consistent performances of Simpson and Wykoff.

Will Represent U. S.

Neither Tolan nor his coaches at Michigan, however, lost heart. And now that he's back in championship form, it's a certainty he will be one of three sprinters who will represent the United States in a special invitation 100 yard race against the three best dashmen of the British empire at the international meet Aug. 27 at Soldiers' field.

Tolan's achievements recall the athletic performances of others of his race. Negroes have established many records in the sprints and jumps and apparently have a particular aptitude for these events. With the exception of a few stars in the quarter mile race and possibly only one great star in the half mile, they have not excelled in other track and field events.

However, the speed and springiness which nature has given the Negro has brought him prominence in football, basketball and boxing. College nines have produced many Negro stars who might have made their mark in professional baseball were the organized leagues open to them. The performers in the Negro National league are proof.

Drew Shared Dash Work.

Howard P. Drew, University of Southern California's Negro sprinter, long held a share in the world 100 yard dash record of 9 3-5 seconds. Drew worked his way through the Springfield, Mass., High school as a baggage man before attending the University of Southern California. After being graduated he attended law school at Drake university and now is an attorney at Hartford, Conn.

Ten years ago Pete White and Roy Morse were running the dashes for the Crescent Athletic club of New York and had things their own way in the metropolitan district of the A. A. U.

Sol Butler is another Negro who will be remembered for his athletic ability while a student at Dubuque university, Dubuque, Ia. Butler established interscholastic records at Northwestern and Chicago while a prep at Hutchinson, Kas. Later he attended Rock Island High school, and from there went to Dubuque. Butler not only was a great sprinter, but he also was an all around performer, participating in both hurdle races and the broad jump in addition to starring on the gridiron and diamond.

RECORD HOLDER

EDDIE TOLAN.

Held Broad Jump Record.

Butler was a member of the 1920 Olympic team and at the time of his selection held the American broad jump record of 24 feet 8 inches. He now is engaged in newspaper work in Chicago.

Ned Gourdin of Harvard is another of the list of Negro jumpers. At one time he held the eastern intercollegiate broad jump championship with a mark of 25 feet 3 inches.

De Hart Hubbard will be remembered by Michigan. He established a world record of 25 feet 10⅞ inches in the broad jump at Stagg's interscholastic meet in 1925. Hubbard now is a playground instructor at Cincinnati.

Only two men have been able to surpass Hubbard's mark in the subsequent five years. Ed Hamm of Georgia Tech won the 1928 Olympic title with a jump of 25 feet 11⅛ inches. The present world record is held by a Negro from Haiti. He jumped 26 feet ⅛ inch in 1928 in a post-Olympic meet in Paris.

There's Gordon at Iowa.

Edward L. Gordon, Iowa's great track star who prepped at Gary, Ind., is the latest in the list of Negro broad jumpers. His best record is 25 feet which won the 1930 intercollegiate meet at Stagg field.

John B. Taylor, who was a famous quarter miler at the University of Pennsylvania more than 20 years ago, was the first of his race to excel in this event. However, it remained for Henry Dismond, familiarly known to University of Chicago fans as Binga, to establish himself as one of the greatest at this distance. Dismond's best time of 47 4-10 seconds made in the Big Ten meet at Evanston in 1916 tied Ted Meredith's best time for the 440 yard dash. The Pennsylvania star always seemed to have an edge over Dismond when the pair met. Ted set his mark in the intercollegiates of 1916. Dismond still holds the Western conference record.

John Lewis, University of Detroit Negro quarter miler, is worthy of mention.

Phil Edwards of Columbia, a native of British Guiana, is famous both as a quarter miler and in the half mile. Edwards will race at Soldiers' field Aug. 27 as a member of the British Empire team. He set a mark of 1 minute 52 2-10 seconds while winning the intercollegiate half mile title in 1929 to tie Ted Meredith's mark made in 1916. Another exception to the general run of track stars is Gus Moore, National A. A. U. cross-country champion, who has run the mile in 4:15. He now holds the metropolitan title.

Other track stars who should be included in a list of great Negro athletes are Ted Cable and Alexander Jackson, both of Harvard. Cable, now a dentist in Indianapolis, Ind., was intercollegiate champion in the hammer throw in 1912 and 1913. Jackson was hurdle champion a year later. He is a Chicagoan and is president of the board of directors of the Provident hospital.

Great Negro Grid Players.

Fritz Pollard, Paul Robeson, and Duke Slater head the list of great Negro football players. Pollard was chosen all American halfback in 1916 by Walter Camp while playing at Brown university. Robeson, who attended Rutgers, was placed on the same honor roll in 1918 at end while Slater's remarkable record as a tackle at Iowa under Howard Jones needs no explanatory remarks. It has been said repeatedly and undoubtedly is true that Slater did more than his share to make Aubrey Devine's reputation as a great runner.

More Recent Stars.

More recently are Gideon Smith and Harvey Graves of Michigan State college. Graves was a contemporary of George Gipp, famous Notre Dame all American, and was a member of a team which defeated Gipp's eleven. Smith is now coaching at Hampton Institute, Va.

Northwestern has had several Negro stars including Thomas Verdell, now coaching at Howard university, Washington, D. C.; Sam Peyton, Roy Young Hale Parker, and Sam Taylor.

Richard Hudlin, captain of the University of Chicago tennis team a few seasons ago, and Douglas Turner of Illinois, runner-up for the big Ten championship this year, top the list of Negro tennis players.

The records of Negro boxers speak for themselves. From the days of Joe Gans, one of the greatest of all fighters, down to Jack Thompson, welterweight titleholder, the race has produced boxers whose athletic ability matches the greats of the gridiron and track.

OLD ELM CLOSED TO WOMEN, BUT ONE RUNS CLUB

Nothing to Break Leisurely Routine of Members.

(This is the fifth of a series of articles on golf clubs of the Chicago district.)

There is at least one club where men play golf with no women to distract them, no scorekeeper to worry them, and no tournaments to upset the leisurely atmosphere of informal play. That club is far up on the north shore, west of Fort Sheridan, and its name is Old Elm.

To Old Elm a group of Chicagoans prominent in greatly diversified fields have been coming week after week and some day after day for 17 years. The affairs of the club move in so orderly a manner and the members remain so unruffled toward the issues which excite other organizations that only death brought about the election of a new president after E. F. Cary had held that office for 16 years. His successor is Wallace Winters.

Enter by Little Used Road.

The visitor approaches the club by way of a little used road and presently comes upon a low, rambling building which resembles an Italian villa, with just a suggestion of rose coloring upon its walls, which first might appear white. Inside, the floors are paved with flagstones and there is a fountain playing in a little patio.

There have been few happenings in its history to ripple the placid surface of the tide of the club's affairs. If any other organization were being discussed these happenings might be called events, but in the case of Old Elm they can be classified more accurately as incidents.

For instance, there was the time when the prince of Wales stayed at the club while he was visiting Chicago. Then the crown prince of Sweden partook of its hospitality and more recently Bobby Jones tried its greens and fairways while pausing here on his way to the national open.

Club Uses 200 Acres.

By way of paradox, this club, which is so rigid in its rules against admitting women, has one for its manager. And there are many who might say that if one must be managed, who could do it more pleasantly than Mrs. Freida Jones? She has been connected with the club since its beginning and took over its affairs last July upon the death of her husband, who had been manager up to that time.

The original tract of 160 acres was acquired in 1913, most of it from the Sweeney family, and later purchases have brought the property to approximately 200 acres.

The first president, W. A. Alexander, still is a member and some of the others who have been going to Old Elm for 17 years, are Stanley Field, George and Fred McLaughlin, Frank Jones, Walter Wilson, Alexander Revell, C. G. King, and B. H. Marshall.

J. Cohn Defeats Lynch in Boys' Tennis Final

Culver, Ind., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Jay Cohn, Santa Monica, Cal., retained the national boys' singles tennis championship today by defeating Jack Lynch, Taft, Cal., his doubles partner, 6-3, 6-3. Wilmer Hines, Columbia, S. C., beat James Bobbitt, Pasadena, Cal., for the junior title, 6-2, 6-1, 6-3.

Bobbitt, who upset Karl Kamrath, Austin, Tex., the first seeded star, Friday, by playing soft chops and lobs, tried to play the same game today against Hines, but the southerner ran around Bobbitt's high bounding returns in the first two sets to take them shoulder high on his forehand.

Bobbitt changed to a hard-driving game in the third set. He led at 3-2 at one time, but Hines outdrove and outvolleyed him at the net to run four straight games and the match.

The boys' finals was distinctly an anti-climax. Lynch had played almost perfect tennis in the semi-finals, eliminating Frankie Parker, 14 year old Milwaukee star, who had trimmed Cohn the three times they played this year. Today Lynch was off his game, appearing to be nervous, with a result that his timing was bad on most of his shots.

Hines and Judge Beaver, Gainesville, Ga., won the junior doubles championship.

MANGIN, SUTTER IN FINAL

Rye, N. Y., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Gregory Mangin, Davis cup alternate of Newark, N. J., and 19 year old Clifford Sutter of New Orleans, holder of the intercollegiate championship, fought their way to the final round of the eastern grass courts men's singles championship on wet courts today. Mangin turned back John Van Ryn, Newark, N. J., 6-1, 6-1, while Sutter's win came over Berkeley Bell, Austin, Tex., 6-4, 6-3.

The two youngsters will clash tomorrow afternoon, while the title round in the women's singles will bring together Miss Marjorie Gladman, Santa Monica, Cal., and Baroness Giacomo Levi of Italy, former Chicago girl, who has been the sensation of the women's championship this week. Miss Gladman today defeated Miss Clara Louise Zinke, Cincinnati, 6-3, 6-3, while Baroness Levi eliminated Miss Helen Marlowe, Los Angeles, 6-0, 6-3.

The women's doubles final round match tomorrow will present Miss Virginia Hilleary, Philadephia, and Miss Dorothy Andrub, Stamford, Conn., against Miss Virginia Rice, Boston, and Miss Clara Zinke, Cincinnati. The former pair today downed Miss Edith Cross, San Francisco, and Miss Mianne Palfrey, Brookline, Mass., 8-6, 7-5, 6-1, while the Rice-Zinke team defeated Miss Marjorie Gladman, Santa Monica, Cal., and Miss Josephine Cruickshank, Santa Ana, Cal., 6-4, 5-7, 6-4.

Durham, N. C., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Add Warren, Durham heavyweight, was signed today for a bout with K. O. Christner of Akron, O., on Sept. 1, at Macon, Ga., with Young Stribling as referee. Warren's manager reported Christner had also signed.

Woods and Waters

by BOB. BECKER

Farmers and estate owners in the central states who want to increase the number of game and song birds on their property can work out a coöperative plan for the establishment of a game refuge which will benefit not only the actual owner of the tract but all of the surrounding country as well. Certainly farmers, more than any other group in our population, should be interested in the establishment and maintenance of effective bird refuges.

The welfare of the crops and the commercial success of the farm are intimately related to the bird population present and their economic tendencies. On the average farm in the United States there are only about two pairs of birds to the acre. Protective measures have increased this number to as high as 59 pairs to the acre in some sections.

In Illinois and other states departments of conservation stand ready to coöperate with land owners in the establishment of bird or so called game refuges on farmers' land. Frequently the land owner can make a connection with an Audubon society, a bird club, a school, or a group of Scouts whereby the latter furnish feeding stations, bird houses, see that the song and game birds are fed during the winter, and otherwise help the farmer produce a fine crop of birds.

Incidentally, the benefits of this refuge idea with respect to trespass problems are not to be overlooked. As soon as the refuge is established the law gives the owner of the land on which the refuge is maintained absolute protection, thus increasing the effectiveness of both private and coöperative refuges. This is true in Illinois, where the "posting" or no tresspass law has teeth in it.

In creating a refuge, the first step is to insure adequate protection against all bird enemies [horned owls, crows, weasels, bird killing hawks, etc.]; second, to see that the land has plenty of cover for nesting sites; and third, to make sure that plenty of water and food are available.

THE TRIBUNE's new bird book, entitled "Birds and Birdhouses," now on sale for 25 cents per copy, gives many tips on how to feed birds on a refuge and how to exterminate their natural enemies. This book can be obtained from the public service office of THE TRIBUNE, 1 South Dearborn street, Chicago. A copy to be sent by mail requires an additional three cents for postage.

ARIEL SAILS TO FOURTH VICTORY IN LIPTON RACE

Vail-Sheridan Sloop Totals 18 Points.

Ariel, R class sloop owned by Malcolm D. Vail and E. E. Sheridan, of the Chicago Yacht club, yesterday again made good its reputation of the most consistent "money" boat in the annual Lipton cup races off Belmont harbor, winning the trophy for the fourth time.

The Vail-Sheridan boat, one of the Chicago yachts which recently have found aviation principles conducive to speed, didn't win the third and final race yesterday, but she placed third to accumulate 18 points for the three days' racing. The Ariel has won four times, placed second twice, and tied for second and third in her eight Lipton cup starts.

The finishing order of yesterday's race was as follows:

Nancy, owned by Kimball and Railton; Giaver and Massee's Jonnie, Ariel, Dr. Hollis Potter's Calypso, Samuel Dauchy's Varya, William Colvin's Atalanta, and Schoenfield's Gossoon.

Sail over 12 Mile Course.

The race was sailed over a quadrilateral course of 12 nautical miles, once around. Ariel took the lead from the Jonnie on the third leg and held it until she was within a mile and a half of the finish. Then Skipper Vail took her back to cover Atalanta, with which she was tied in the point standings after the first two days.

The final point standing for the three days' series was: Ariel, 18; Atalanta, 15; Jonnie, 14; Nancy, 13; Calypso, 13; Varya, 8, and Gossoon, 3.

In the race for the Nutting cup off Belmont harbor yesterday, Falcon, owned by Robert Haynie, won the third of the series and tied George Getz's Acquila, each having a total of nine points. They will said it off in a special race this afternoon. Dr. Davis' Orn was second yesterday and Dr. Metz's Altair third, with Acquila last.

Pick Bennett Cup Boats.

The four boats which will compete for the Bennett cup on Sept. 13 were chosen yesterday off Jackson park, where last Saturday's race, wrecked by a sudden squal, was resailed. The four are the O'Rourke brothers' Intruder, Q class; Bryce Hess' Beaver, yawl; Commodore Ted Dunlap's Fame, schooner, and Bert Williamson's Edith II, 30 footer.

Yesterday's races were run over a windward to leeward course. In the Q class, Ed Jedrykowski's Princess defeated the Intruder by four minutes. The latter won the right to compete in the September final by virtue of two previous victories. It has won the Bennett cup for the last seven years.

Edith II won a close race in the 30 foot class from Columbia, owned and sailed by Hal Redmon, who brought his new schooner Admiral down from Milwaukee just in time to board the Columbia.

In a race for jack boats, Cracker Jack defeated the Jack Pot by 31 seconds.

Manero's 139 Leads St. Paul Golf; Rouse 2d

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 16.—(AP)—Two par breaking rounds of golf today sent Tony Manero, New York professional, one shot ahead of a closely bunched field in St. Paul's $10,000 open championship tournament.

Unperturbed by the treacherous wind that stopped most of the leaders, Manero today circled the course in 70 strokes, which, added to his 69 of yesterday, gave him 139, five under par for the 36 holes. The tournament will end with two 18 hole rounds tomorrow.

Rouse Shoots 68; Total 140.

One shot behind Manero came "Sunny" Rouse, young Chicago professional. Rouse toured the course in 68 strokes, four under perfect figures, for a 140 total. Rouse played a flawless game, bagging birdies on the four long holes and holding par even on the others. He went out in 34 and came home with the same score.

Gene Sarazen of New York, who topped the field yesterday with his record smashing 67, had hard luck with his putter today, but came in with a 74, which landed him in third place with 142. Tied with Sarazen was Otto Hackbarth, Cincinnati, O., veteran.

Three strokes away from Manero were Horton Smith of New York, "Lighthorse Harry" Cooper of Chicago, and Johnny Goodman, the Omaha amateur. The only dark horse left among the leaders was Harold McSpaden of Bethel, Kas., who had 143 strokes. Johnny Dawson of Chicago, Charles Lacey of Clementsen, N. J., and Tommy Armour of Detroit, western open champion, had 144; Walter Hagen, 145, and Johnny Farrell, 146.

Espinosa Down List with 147.

Others still left with a chance were Willard Hutchinson, Chicago, 145; Lester Bolstad of Minneapolis, former Big Ten champion; Ed Dudley, Wilmington, Del., 146; and Al Espinosa, Chicago, 147.

MOTORS — TRAFFIC — HIGHWAYS

MUSTER FORCE FOR TRAFFIC AT U. S. AIR RACES

Crew of 700 Men Will Handle Crowds.

BY HAL FOUST.

A force of 700 men is being mustered to handle traffic and parking at Curtiss airport for the national air races, starting next Saturday and lasting through Labor day. Daily attendance may run as high as 100,000, and automobiles will carry a large portion of the crowds, although railroads will run special trains from the loop.

The county highway department this week is putting the finishing touches on the secondary roads in the immediate vicinity of the airport. Scrapers are smoothing the gravel. Oil and calcium chloride will eliminate dust.

Parking space for 33,000 cars has been leased. The lots are convenient to the grand stands.

The Chicago Motor club has marked five routes to the airport, each ending at a parking lot. Within a mile or so of the lots, one way traffic probably will take over the entire right of way, going toward the parking space before the races and leaving the lots after the races.

When the car is parked, a general admission fee of $1 per person will be collected. There will be no extra charge for the parking privilege.

The police force will consist of 250 soldiers from Fort Sheridan, 250 students attending the parking lots, and detachments of city, state, and county police.

Planes Scout Traffic.

The movement of traffic will be watched from an airplane. When a blockade occurs on one road, the plane will land and, by means of a special telephone system, communicate with police on the road and reroute the automobiles.

In working out the traffic arrangements, the race management studied systems used at large events in other parts of the country. Every effort has been made to relieve congestion; nevertheless, there will be congestion, such as takes place at football games. The roads are not adequate for fast transportation and it would be uneconomical to lay pavements that would receive a maximum utility only a few days out of the year.

One of the routes marked by the motor club will follow South Shore drive, Lief Ericsson drive, Michigan avenue and Sheridan road to Granville avenue, going west on Granville, north on California to Devon avenue, west on Devon to McCormick boulevard, north on McCormick boulevard to Dempster street, west to Harms road, north to Glenview road, west to Lehigh avenue and north to the field. This route will carry red markers. If it becomes congested close to the field, traffic will be routed north at Harms road to Lake avenue and will follow Lake avenue into the field while crowd on the main road is thinning out.

Routes Color Marked.

Blue markers will follow Milwaukee avenue from Lawrence avenue to Waukegan road to Shermer road, and will follow Shermer road to the field. If Shermer road becomes congested Waukegan road and Lehigh avenue may be used as an auxiliary route.

Traffic from downstate cities and from the west side suburbs will follow the green route, which will follow Willow Springs road from Archer avenue to Joliet road, Joliet road to Mannheim road, Mannheim road to River road, River road to Central road, Central road to Milwaukee avenue, Milwaukee avenue to Glenview road, Glenview road to Shermer road, and Shermer road to the field. If the east end of Glenview road becomes blocked traffic may be diverted east over Central road to Shermer road, and so into the field.

Traffic from the northwest part of Illinois and Wisconsin will follow the yellow route along Milwaukee avenue to Lake avenue and east on Lake avenue to the field.

Motorists living in the lake shore towns from Highland Park north will follow the pink route west on County Line road to Green Bay road, south to Dundee road, west to Walters avenue, southwest to Shermer road, and south on Shermer road to the airport.

Willow road from the airport to Waukegan road will be reserved for buses, taxicabs, and official cars.

Secondary Roads Picked.

In laying out the routes secondary roads were chosen so as not to interfere with the regular traffic on main highways.

Since two of the marked routes will be using Shermer road into the field from the south, this route is to be one way inbound before the races from route 58, or Golf road, to the field. After the events its direction will be reversed.

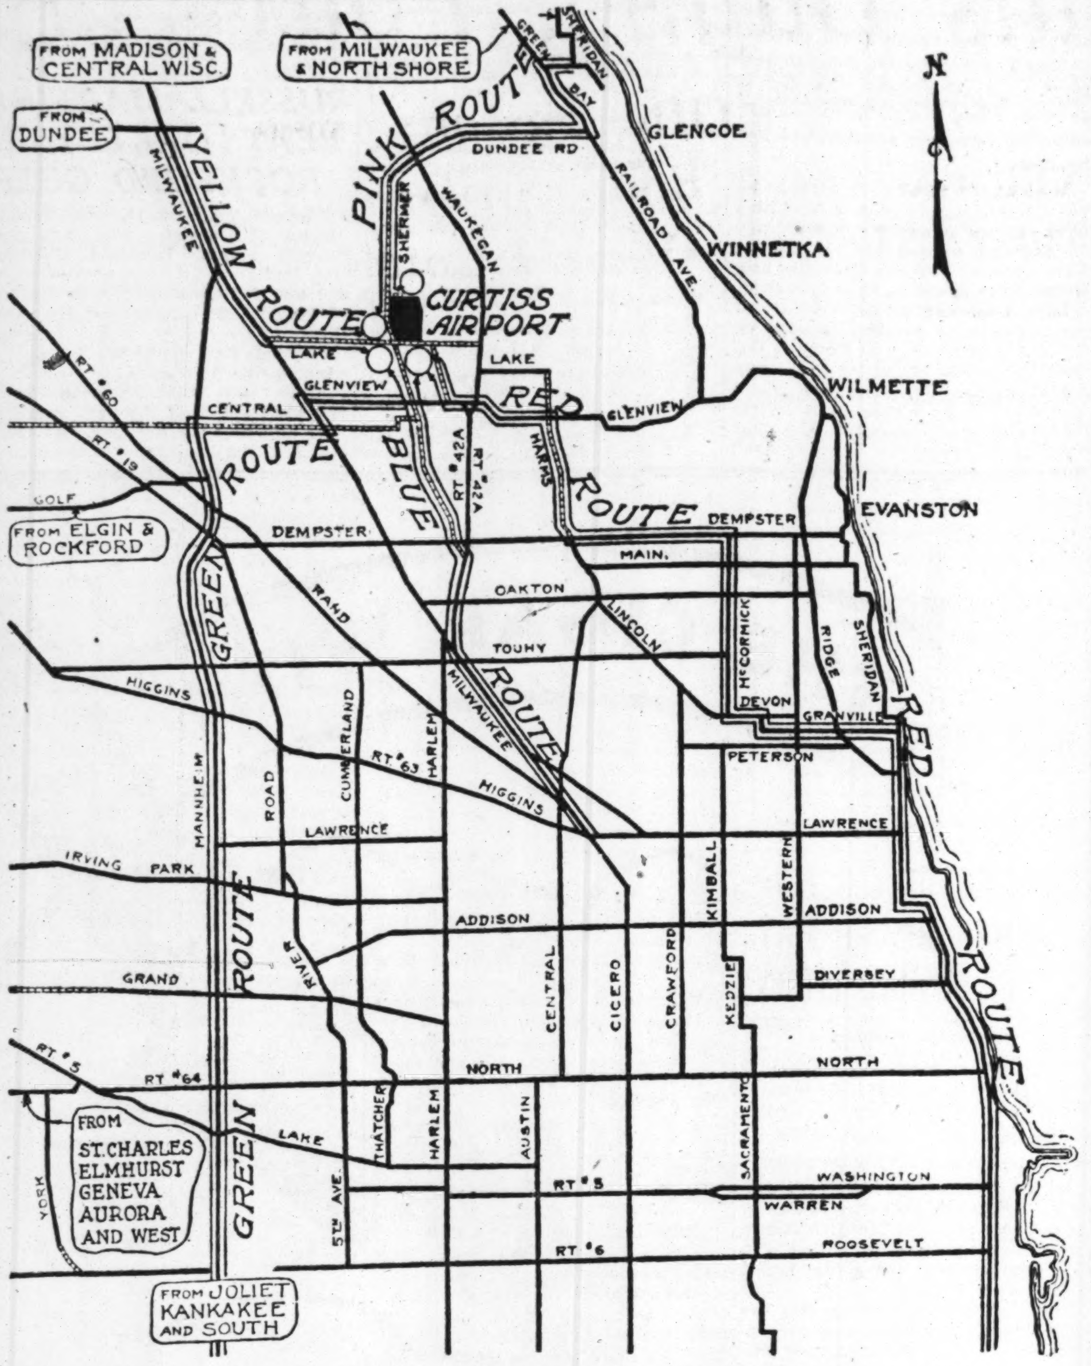
It is expected that motorists will leave the field in the same direction in which they enter.

Lake avenue between Lehigh avenue and Shermer road is to be reserved for the pedestrians who must cross from the parking spaces to the south to the grand stands on the fields to the north of Lake avenue.

Shermer road is asphaltic macadam, in good condition. All of the roads in the immediate vicinity of the airport which are now graveled will be oiled for the races. However, Lake avenue between Lehigh avenue and Shermer road will remain as gravel and calcium chloride will be placed upon it to settle the dust. If oiled, it would be quite dirty for pedestrians.

In addition to the routes marked in colors the Chicago Motor club is erecting about 8,000 black and white markers on downstate highways, which will guide the motorists to some marked route. In addition, these black and white markers are to be placed on the Lincoln highway [route 22] from the Indiana line to Kean avenue [route 51], and on Kean avenue north to 95th street and west on 95th street to 104th avenue, and north to connect with the green route. Also, Sibley boulevard, 147th street, and 143d street will be marked from the Indiana line to Kean avenue.

HOW TO GET TO AIR RACES



This map shows routes to the Curtiss airport, where the national air races open on Saturday. The circles around the airport indicate parking lots that will accommodate 33,000 cars. The Chicago Motor club has posted the routes with colored markers, each route ending at a parking lot marked with the same color. The map was prepared by the Chicago Regional Planning association.

AVIATION

CROSS-COUNTRY AIR DERBIES ON WING NEXT WEEK

Flyers to Start from 7 U. S. Cities.

BY ROBERT WOOD.

Six of the seven cross-country air derbies will be on the wing next week, headed for Curtiss airport and the national air races, where prizes and fame await the winners. The seventh race, the non-stop dash from Los Angeles to Chicago, will start Aug. 26.

As the derby flyers prepare to start from seven cities on the rim of the United States, Maj. R. W. Schroeder, director of events for the air races, made public the complete itinerary of the seven derbies which will end here during the races from Aug. 23 to Sept. 1.

More than $40,000 has been offered in prize money for the winners of the derbies whose starting points are Los Angeles, Miami, Hartford, Seattle, Brownsville, Tex.; Long Beach and Washington, D. C. The derbies will bring new speed records and new names for aviation's hall of fame, according to Maj. Schroeder.

Routes Are Announced.

The race director announced the following routes for the derbies, the distance of each and the prize money offered.

MEN'S NON-STOP DERBY—FROM LOS ANGELES TO CHICAGO. Approximately 1,760 miles. Prizes: First, $7,500; second, $4,500. Contestants must start so as to arrive at Curtiss airport between 1 and 7 p. m., central standard time, on Wednesday, Aug. 27.

MEN'S ATLANTIC DERBY, CLASS "A"—MIAMI TO CHICAGO. Approximately 1,545 miles. Prizes, $3,500. Leave Miami noon, Aug. 20, and arrive Chicago about 3:30 p. m. Aug. 23, via Tampa, Jacksonville, Macon, Augusta, Murfreesboro, Cincinnati, and Joliet.

MEN'S ATLANTIC DERBY, CLASS "B"—HARTFORD TO CHICAGO. Approximately 1,170 miles. Prizes, $2,500. Leave Hartford at 10 a. m., Aug. 21 and arrive Chicago about 3:30 p. m., Aug. 24 via Albany, Syracuse, Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, Bay City, Grand Rapids, South Bend, and Joliet.

MEN'S PACIFIC DERBY, CLASS "A"—FROM SEATTLE TO CHICAGO. Approximately 2,130 miles. Prizes, $7,000. Leave Seattle 10 a. m., Aug. 21, arrive Chicago about 3:30 p. m., Aug. 25, via Portland, Spokane, Butte, Billings, Bismarck, Aberdeen, Fargo, St. Paul, and Milwaukee.

MEN'S PACIFIC DERBY, CLASS "B"—BROWNSVILLE, TEX., TO CHICAGO. Approximately 1,800 miles. Prizes, $4,000. Leave Brownsville 9 a. m., Aug. 19, and arrive Chicago about 2:30 p. m., Aug. 23 via Corpus Christi, Houston, San Antonio, Waco, Fort Worth, Wichita Falls, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Springfield, Mo., St. Louis, and Aurora.

WOMEN'S PACIFIC DERBY, CLASS "A"—FROM LONG BEACH, CAL., TO CHICAGO. Prizes, $7,000. Leave Long Beach 3:30 p. m., Aug. 17, and arrive Chicago the afternoon of Aug. 25 via San Diego, Calexico, Phoenix, Tucson, Douglas, Lordsburg, Deming, Roswell, Lubbock, Amarillo, Enid, Wichita, Kansas City, Des Moines, Madison, and Elgin.

WOMEN'S DIXIE DERBY, CLASS "B"—FROM WASHINGTON TO CHICAGO. Approximately 1,575 miles. Prizes, $4,000. Leave Washington 11 a. m., Aug. 22, and arrive Chicago about 3:30 p. m., Aug. 26 via Richmond, Raleigh, Columbia, Atlanta, Birmingham, Memphis, St. Louis, Springfield, and Elgin.

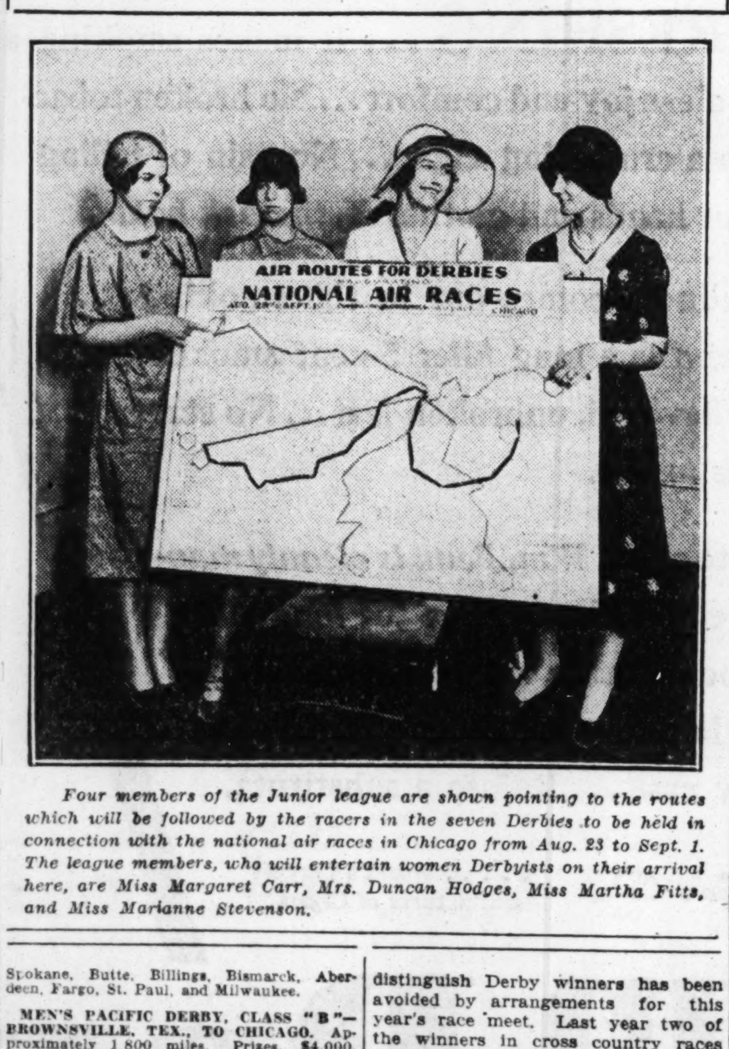
Planes to Be Marked.

Confusion which made it difficult for spectators at previous races to distinguish Derby winners has been avoided by arrangements for this year's race meet. Last year two of the winners in cross country races flew across the finish line to victory without any recognition from the crowd. This year all the flyers save those in the nonstop race will land at control points in Joliet or Elgin, word of their approach will be telephoned to the race field, where their arrival will be announced. Nonstop flyers will pass over Joliet.

The planes will be marked with numbers and colors which will be easily distinguished by the crowds. The winners then will be taxied to pits below the grand stand, where prizes will be awarded.

Army planes with flight surgeons aboard will accompany the derbists, despite the protests of some of the girls who have stated that they want no more consideration than the men racers, who are not provided with this safety measure.

DERBY ROUTES MAPPED



Four members of the Junior league are shown pointing to the routes which will be followed by the racers in the seven Derbies to be held in connection with the national air races in Chicago from Aug. 23 to Sept. 1. The league members, who will entertain women Derbyists on their arrival here, are Miss Margaret Carr, Mrs. Duncan Hodges, Miss Martha Fitts, and Miss Marianne Stevenson.

APPROVE USE OF HIGHER POWERED HEAD LIGHTING

Charles A. Harnett, commissioner of vehicles for the state of New York, has approved the use of 32-candle power bulbs for all head lighting devices appearing on the approved list, thereby taking another step to provide safety for the drivers of automobiles at night.

This action was authorized by a recent amendment to the vehicle and traffic law, which heretofore limited the automobile light source to 21-candle power for use in New York. An investigation of the lighting qualities of the headlamps on the approved list has shown that the use of a high candle power bulb will not affect glare. Poor adjustment, not increased candle power, is responsible for glaring headlights.

TO EXPERIMENT WITH IRON FOR PAVEMENT BASE

Test Strip Will Be Laid Near Springfield.

A pavement with an iron base and curb will be laid on a state highway in Sangamon county this month as the first test of a new design for which William H. Moseley, Springfield manufacturer, has applied for patents.

"I'm working," said Mr. Moseley, "toward a road with 100 year life under the wear of 100 mile an hour traffic, longevity with low maintenance and speed with safety.

"The conventional materials have shown unsatisfactory weaknesses. Concrete, in the state's standard slabs or as base for asphalt or brick surface, cracks with changes of temperature, explodes with excessive heat, and develops frost boils. Without the concrete base, brick and asphalt sag and rut. These are established facts that can be verified by the lay motorists by a 500 mile drive over any of our state highways three or four years old.

Rust Offers Problem.

"Highway engineers always have looked upon steel as a desirable pavement foundation, but never have given the material a thorough study because of the high cost and because of rust. However, much has been done in the iron industry lately to cut the costs and retard erosion.

"Iron, however, does not become an economic paving material until a design is perfected that will give greater strength per thickness. We have two ideas on this design, both of which will be tested. Turning up the edges of a horizontal sheet gives rigidity. Rigidity also is obtained by corrugation.

"There are several ways of treating steel to resist rust. One of the most common is by a coating of bituminous preparation such as is used on the thousands of miles of transcontinental oil and gas pipe lines. Galvanized iron and ingot iron are among the other processed materials. Also the B. F. Goodrich Rubber company recently has perfected a method of welding rubber onto steel."

To Use Ingot Iron.

The first experimental contract is for 150 feet of pavement on the Grand avenue connection, near Springfield, with the Rochester road. The American Rolling Mills company of Middletown, O., is manufacturing the metal, ingot iron a fourth inch thick.

The iron base and curb will be laid on the leveled roadway. A mastic sand cushion will be placed over the plates. Brick will be laid on the sand with an asphaltic filler. Truman L. Flatt, superintendent of Sangamon county highways, will supervise construction.

Frank Sheets, state highway engineer, said a careful check will be made on original costs and that a record will be kept on maintenance work. The original cost is expected to be higher than the conventional pavements. Quantity production would give a competitive cost. Maintenance is expected to be cheaper than concrete.

Brick is being used as a surface, but it does not mean that brick is the most desirable associate with the steel base and curbs. This much is conceded freely by Mr. Moseley, the designer, who is a brick manufacturer. He does not concede that brick has a vibration, even on a level surface, due to the joint every two and a half inches.

Brick to Be Used.

"Brick on a mastic cushion and with an elastic filler, is the only one of the conventional road materials suitable for the experiment," he said. "We couldn't use concrete; the purpose of the steel base is to overcome the weaknesses of cement. The bituminous materials are either too soft in hot weather or too brittle in cold.

"So we're using brick, which distributes the load on the foundation, furnishes good traction, and, with the elastic filler, will be able to expand and contract without cracking or bulging as the steel plates slide on their joints under the influence of changes of temperature.

"I'm not a blind enthusiast for the steel highway. But I'm thoroughly convinced of the inadequacy of present material and designs to meet the needs of traffic, with its ever increasing volume and speed. Possibly the road of the future will consist of a steel base with a coating of rubber composition to cushion the blows of rolling wheels, to furnish traction better than metal or the present common forms of hard rubber, and to prevent rust to the base.

"There's a big market for road building material, one that's worthy of study by the best minds of the country. America's spending two billion a year on its roads today and it will spend more tomorrow, widening highways, improving grades and alignments, and smoothing surfaces for 100 mile an hour travel."

COOK COUNTY BUYS HALF OF JULY AUTOS

Of the 6,883 new cars sold in Illinois in July over half of them were disposed of in Cook county, according to the analyzed new automobile report prepared by the Illinois chamber of commerce. The county with the largest number of sales outside of Cook was Peoria, with 416 cars, while Jasper, with five car sales during the month, had the least. Following Peoria county in the order named are: Lake, 362; Kane, 337; Madison, 324; Sangamon, 315; Du Page, 310; St. Clair, 301; Winnebago, 253; Will, 252; Macon, 217; La Salle, 211, and McLean, 197.

"Stagger" Lights Speed Up Traffic, New York Finds

BY TOM PETTEY.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—Street travel in New York City, particularly in the congested area of Manhattan, has been speeded up approximately 15 per cent by the new "progressive" or "stagger" system of traffic control lights, according to Philip D. Hoyt, deputy police commissioner.

The improvement as concerns trolley movements, Mr. Hoyt said today, amounts to 20 per cent over the old speed.

"The 'stagger' system will progress," Mr. Hoyt added, "as further improvements and refinements are added. At first a few motorists were slow in noticing the snappier cycle of light changes and there was some difficulty in left turns, but we are pleased with the showing made."

The progressive system of having the lights flash green at wavelike intervals timed with a uniform speed of motor cars has been in effect on certain avenues in Brooklyn for several months but was not installed in Manhattan until about two weeks ago.

Due to extensive paving operations on Fifth avenue the progressive timing system has not been installed along that boulevard and no comparison can be made with the somewhat similar conditions in Chicago on Michigan avenue.

Here's How It Works.

An example of the gain in speed is shown in a test trip made in a taxi in the midtown section at a traffic rush hour. A trip from Eighth avenue to Lexington avenue via Forty-sixth street, a distance of seven blocks, was made in twelve minutes, five minutes better than the best time that could be made at the same hour under the old light system. Another ride, from Seventy-second street to Thirty-second street, was made in sixteen minutes, a gain of six minutes over the old system.

To the passengers it seemed that the progress made was even better than the stop watch indicated. The stops on the avenues are more frequent but they are comparatively brief—the system operates on a two minute cycle, one minute and thirty seconds for north and south traffic and thirty seconds for cross town flow.

A score of public service agents checked up street car gains under the new system. The trolley lines running across town at the most congested points were timed. The analysis showed:

Line.	Aver. saving in time. Westb'nd.	Eastb'nd.
116th street	6:54	2:58
59th street	8:47	7:10
34th street	10:48	5:13
23d street	5:06	4:51
14th street	7:05	4:18
8th street	1:01	4:39

Motorists Are Pleased.

Motorists whose work takes them to all parts of the city at all hours, report that driving conditions in Manhattan have been greatly improved. William Havelton of Hotel Endicott, who drives his own car, told traffic authorities:

"A man can make better time on north and south bound trips at almost any time except during the theater hours. On crosstown trips the time saved is very pronounced. Congestion of cars and trucks on cross streets where the red light has halted traffic is nowhere near so great as it used to be. The wait is shorter, drivers don't become so impatient and the pileup of traffic is cleared before the next change in lights."

The readjustment of the lights to the progressive system, Mr. Hoyt said, was an operation as simple as setting a clock and required no more time. It consisted of setting discs that revolve at a constant speed with the motors of the signal system for different avenues and streets.

One of the chief advantages of the new system, Mr. Hoyt explained, was the shortening of waits to which pedestrians are subjected. The short light cycle has encouraged pedestrians to wait for the proper signal.

Much Better Time.

The lights are geared to correspond with a speed of about sixteen miles an hour for automobiles, and, while that seems slow, the motorist has foud that he is making much better time than when he traveled in spurts at twenty-five miles an hour under the old plan.

Police checkers have found that traffic moves east and west under the "stagger" system at about 45 seconds per long cross-town block and at about 11½ seconds per shorter block on north and south routes.

Simply stated, the progressive method consists of an arrangement of motor cars in groups separated by gaps. The groups advance continuously up and down the streets, guided by the changing traffic signals. If the groups are too short, drivers will find difficulty in remaining within them and frequently will be cut off by red lights and held for the following group.

To meet conditions in Manhattan where the blocks are short, groups of four blocks in length and gaps of two blocks are used. As the driver proceeds the lights show red here and green there, in apparent confusion, but as he proceeds he notices that the red changes to green as he approaches it and he continues on without a stop.

The left hand turn period occurs when the two block gap appears in the opposing traffic stream and in theory in no way retards its flow. In actual practice, however, there has been some difficulty. This has been remedied to a certain extent here by changes in the timing arrangement too complicated to explain in a brief article, but not affecting the minute and one-half one way and thirty seconds the other way light cycle.

To Experiment Here

Officials and traffic experts representing the city of Chicago, the Lincoln park district, and the south park district will meet this week to study a proposed rearrangement of traffic lights on Michigan avenue from 22d to Oak street. The "progressive" or "stagger" system of timing has been suggested to take the place of the present synchronous timing. The following story from The Tribune's New York office shows the advantages that have accrued to New York's traffic through a similar change in timing the lights.

COUNTY PRINTS HINTS, ADVICE FOR MOTORISTS

Nine hints on driving are printed on a map published recently by the Cook county highway department for free distribution. The maps show the secondary routes of the Chicago area marked by the county with two letter combinations, such as "BG," "PT," and "QL." Copies may be obtained from the highway department or from THE TRIBUNE touring bureau, Madison and Dearborn streets.

The nine hints are as follows:

1. Do not pass another car on a curve, at the top of a hill, at highway intersections, or at railroad grade crossings.

2. Use the outer lane on 40 foot highways except when passing another car. Keep in your lane, don't straddle the lane marker.

3. Never turn or swerve quickly, watch for drivers from behind.

Keep Pace with Traffic.

4. Keep pace with the majority of traffic on heavily traveled highways. If autos are jamming up behind you or you are continually being pressed, you are going too slow, speed up.

5. If you are passing everybody on a heavily traveled road, you are probably driving too fast, slow down.

6. If you wish to take a pleasure drive and wish to drive slowly, pick out some side road and avoid interfering with through traffic.

7. Learn to use your road maps, explore a little and you will find new less congested routes to use.

8. Call your motor club or favorite newspaper for the latest road conditions. A central traffic bureau has been established to furnish these agencies with road information.

9. Learn what the safety signs mean. At night when driving fast the shape of a sign stands out, where the wording may not be legible. Standard traffic signs will become more and more effective as their use and understanding becomes more common. Demand that your community erect only standard signs.

Various Road Signs.

A description of these various shapes of the standard signs and their meanings is as follows:

Octagonal shaped signs mean stop. They are used to indicate a stop where for any reason [a hazard, law or regulation] such action is necessary; for example, a heavily traveled highway.

Diamond shaped signs mean slow. They are used to indicate any condition inherent in the road or street itself, or any hazard that is practically continuous, where slow speed is necessary; for example, a narrow bridge or a dangerous intersection.

Square shaped signs mean caution. They are used to indicate any condition requiring caution that is not inherent in the road or street itself or that is not a continuous hazard; for example, a school or an occasional side road.

Circular shaped signs mean slow. They are used to indicate the approach to a railroad grade crossing.

Crossbuck shaped signs are used to indicate the location of a railroad grade crossing. They may be supplemented by an octagonal stop sign, flashing red lights, or other warning or protection device.

Rectangular shaped signs are used for parking and speed regulations, direction, or other information and restrictions. Route markers sometimes have distinctive shapes; for example, the shield shaped signs are used to indicate U. S. highway routes.

VOICE OF THE TRAFFIC

DIRECTION SIGNS.

Chicago, Aug. 12.—Now that we have your new road map with the "P. D. Q.s" which are announced to mean nothing "in themselves" may we not ask why

Many times we find ourselves uncertain of the direction in which we are going. We think that we are on a north and south road and look to find the first letter B or C which we may know indicates north and south roads and R and Q indicate east and west roads, or like the old lady who marked her mince pies "TM" for "tis mince" and all others "TM" for "tain't mince," we are not sure which.

When we are "turned around" we find it difficult to believe the word of anybody and on even a fairly familiar road the fact that all the landmarks are on the wrong side of the road prevents our recognition of familiar roads.

Since our directions are so well known by N. E. W. or S., as initials, why not mark the right side of all north and south roads N when going north and S on the right when going south. These letters not only suggest the direction of the road as a north and south road, but if we are confused the initial on our right will tell us what direction we are traveling on this north and south road so that if we are completely turned around we have merely to drive with the direction which we wish to go and the initials will show us that we are doing so though we recognize no landmarks and are traveling in darkness or on a strange road.

In the same way east and west roads would show E on all signs on your right if you are going east and W on all signs on your right if you drive west. In this way you can force yourself to drive in the desired direction, knowing that you can trust the signs.

All diagonal roads on which you go northeast should be marked on your right NE, and on the other side SW which saves you the doubt left by the old lady in her pie marking. Also northwest roads NW and southwest SE. These marks may be made to take the space of one letter.

Are the marks less valuable if they carry this information?

HIGHWAY POLICE CAUTION DRIVERS OF NOISY TRUCKS

Barking Exhausts Must Be Silenced, Order.

Walter L. Moody, chief of the state highway police, last week ordered his men to silence unnecessary noises by automobiles on public roads. He referred particularly to the rumble and bark of exhausts from the engines that carry freight over the state's highways at night to avoid the congestion of daylight hours.

"We have received many complaints," he said, "about unmuffled motors roaring through cities, villages and the countryside, disturbing the sleep of residents near important pavements. This night movement of truck traffic has become so heavy that it will be a public nuisance until the operators reduce the noise.

"Although there is some doubt whether the Illinois motor vehicle law prohibits the operation of a car without muffler, almost all of the municipalities of the state have ordinances that provide fines for drivers of the roaring machines. The state highway police can make arrests for violations of these ordinances, but first we want to warn the truck owners."

Sergt. H. W. Nofs, following his chief's orders, between 11 p. m. and 1 a. m. in Elgin one night last week found six trucks with loud engines. An arrest slip was given to the driver of a big van bearing the name of G. Noverin, Mid-West Motor Freight Forwarders, carrying a cargo of general merchandise from Chicago warehouses to Rockford stores. He had been warned previously by Policeman Fred Nelson.

Police Stop Trucks.

The exhaust on the Noverin truck was a straight pipe from the heavy duty motor, under the body to the rear. The driver protested that his mechanics had punched holes in the pipe to eliminate the bark. Floyd Omelia, mechanic for the Chicago Motor club gave his expert opinion that the explosions were not smothered.

A truck of live stock rolled into town from the west, bound for the Chicago stockyards. In second gear there was a staccato popping from the motor. Policemen Ralph Hawbecker and Edward Freer questioned the driver, Arthur Meyers, a young fellow from Davis, Ill.

"That's my music for the lonesome 135 miles from the farms to the stockyards," said Meyers, pointing to a three inch pipe with a split end attached to his muffler.

"There's some folks want to sleep at night," said Policeman Freer. "Better stop the music. Can you pull that thing off the muffler?"

Meyers did, and the motor lost its pop.

"Here comes a bus," Sergt. Nofs called from the other side of the street. "We get as many kicks about them as about trucks."

Cars Are Inspected.

A Northland Greyhound, No. 697, rolled to a stop before the waving flashlight of the highway policemen. There were a dozen passengers, sleeping in their chairs. Mechanic Omelia examined the muffler and pronounced it okay.

A small truck with a black metal body whirred into town from Chicago with a low hum that told of an efficient muffler. It was a dispatcher from the Chicago film exchange, carrying the latest movies to towns and villages of northern Illinois.

A few minutes later a load of live stock en route from Winenbago to the Chicago stockyards was stopped by the police on the main street of Elgin at the same time a refrigerator truck with fresh meat bound from Chicago for Rockford was halted. Both had mufflers that had been blown out and both were warned to make repairs.

Two merchandise haulers from Chicago were stopped. Gus Johnson, license Ill.-6607, had no muffler on his truck. The other machine, owned by the Elmhurst Motor Service company, had a muffler that was ineffective. A machine loaded with tomatoes from the Rock river valley for the Chicago market, driven by John Marra of Rockford, was pronounced okay after an inspection.

And so on into the night.

Deer Offer Problem to Motorists in Michigan

The white-tailed deer are so plentiful in sections of Michigan this season, signs have been erected at certain runways to warn the motorist. "Slow—Deer Runway" is the message that is often seen in the daytime. At night the cat's eye type of warning spreads the message, and the thoughtful motorist slows down to protect these animals.

Big Slump in Silver Price Cuts Buying Power of Orient

BUYERS AT PIT DO ABOUT FACE; BEGIN SELLING

Prices of Grain Slip, Wheat Cheaper.

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Sentiment in the grain markets changes with startling rapidity, and wheat traders who were on the buying side on Friday were fair sellers yesterday, causing a break of 1⅞@2¼c, an outstanding feature being the lack of aggressive buying. The close was within a fraction of the bottom, with net losses of 1⅝@2c, September finishing at 89½@89⅝c; December, 94¾@94⅞c; March, 99¼@99½c, and May, $1.02⅜@1.02½.

Firmness in corn had some effect at times, but all upturns brought in selling orders. Winnipeg acted heavy and finished 1⅞c lower, with hedging pressure a factor there.

There was a lack of the bullish feeling in the grain markets at the close of the week in striking contrast to the condition which prevailed the previous week, and at the finish on Saturday wheat showed net declines of 6@7¼c; corn, ¾@1¾c; oats, 2⅜c, and rye, 5⅜@5⅝c, as compared with a week ago. Lard declined 17½@42½c, and bellies 2½c for the week.

Wheat Offerings Increase.

Increased pressure to sell cash wheat on the part of the world's leading exporting countries is reported in London cables, with Russia, India, the Danube, and Australia offering on a larger scale, while Liverpool claimed pressure of Canadian grain was having some effect on the market. The basis on hard winter wheat at the gulf, however, remains firm, with 6¼c over Chicago September asked for No. 1 hard for last half August loading.

For some time past European buying of North American wheat has been spasmodic, large amounts being secured on the sharp breaks in the price, while on the bulges the demand has fallen off very rapidly. Stocks abroad are generally regarded as down to a point where persistent purchases will have to be made, so that buying orders are regarded as certain to make their appearance whenever the market has a bad break.

The trade is looking for a liberal increase to be shown in the domestic visible supply statement on Monday, probably between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000 bu, which will compare with an increase of 7,500,000 bu last year. Considering weather conditions in the American northwest the movement there has not been heavy so far this season, although threshing is well along.

Argentine shippers were sellers of futures at Liverpool, which closed ⅛@⅝d higher, failing to reflect fully the upturn in North America on Friday. Buenos Aires finished ¾@1c lower.

Corn Traders Fear Rain.

Forecast for unsettled weather during the coming week was mainly responsible for selling of corn futures, and the close was 1⅛@1¾c lower, with September finishing at 97½@97⅝c; December, 92¾@93c; March, 94⅞@95c, and May, 97⅜@97½c.

Bulk of the trade was of a local character, with commission houses selling on the minor upturns. Reports of barren stalks are coming from a wider territory. E. J. Feehery & Co.'s Sterling, Ill., office wired that a count of 416 stalks showed that 211 were barren.

H. A. Rumsey, an official of the Chicago Board of Trade, returned yesterday from a week's trip through northwestern Iowa, and says conditions in that territory are much better than in central and southern Illinois. Farmers and grain dealers in that territory look for yields of 19 to 40 bu corn per acre. Cattle feeders have suffered terribly, and feeding this winter may be curtailed by expensive feeds.

Old Corn in Iowa.

This, he says, is especially true in South Dakota. There is more old corn back in northwestern Iowa than any other section he has heard of, but it will be largely used for feeding. Large amounts of barley and fairly liberal supplies of oats are available, and while dealers have orders for large amounts of barley farmers are unwilling to sell.

"It was rather impressive," said Mr. Rumsey, "to find a large number of people in the territory covered who expressed the opinion that, taken as a whole, the failure of the corn crop is not an unmixed curse. They figure that with maturing of early prospects, corn would have sold under 50c and oats around 20c, whereas compulsory change in feeding tactics has brought more money for oats and barley, and will improve the price of wheat."

Outside interests were good buyers of oats early, but the market eased in sympathy with other grains toward the last and finished with net losses of ⅝@¾c, with September 39⅞c and December 43¼@43⅜c at the last.

Rye was heavy a good part of the day on hedging pressure from the northwest and in sympathy with wheat and closed ⅞@1⅞c lower. September finished at 59⅛c, and December 64¾c.

Magic Fails as Cure for Wheat Ills

BY SCRUTATOR.

Many solutions for farm problems, having in them the elements of magic, have been suggested to the federal farm board and have been rejected.

Dr. Joseph S. Davis, chief economist of the farm board, has issued a statement detailing why the more radical plans, which involve no effort on the part of growers themselves to relieve wheat and make it again a high priced grain, will not work.

According to the scientists, some of the proposals have been pressed vigorously and the board has given them earnest consideration. Among the most prominent are these: That the board have the stabilization corporation buy up another hundred million bushels of wheat; that we enlarge domestic consumption of wheat; that the surplus be shipped to starving or underfed people in India and China, and that a general policy of export dumping at the expense of growers, the federal treasury, and consumers be adopted.

Shows Proposals Absurd.

One by one, Dr. Davis shows the absurdity of these proposed solutions. Buying another great mass of wheat would accelerate the movement of grain from farms; would cut down our exports at the season when there is least competition from other countries; would increase congestion at terminals, and would not permanently raise the price level; would discriminate against farmers who have already sold and might depress world prices by increasing the visible supply.

His second point is that domestic consumption of wheat cannot be expected to increase per capita. It has shrunk since pre-war days from five bushels per inhabitant to 4.2 bushels. He indicates that the wheat deficiency in American diet has been made up by more milk, vegetables and sugar; and that the change has been in the national interest.

India an Exporter.

As for shipping to India, Dr. Davis finds that India this year has a crop far above normal domestic needs and is itself an exporter of wheat. Even India's farmers would object to having more shipped in there. Chinese undernourishment has been found a result of disturbed conditions and poor distribution solely.

Eastern China has the best wheat crop in years. Wheat can be bought in parts of China for half what it would cost to buy and ship Kansas wheat to Chinese railroad points. To ship there would not be intelligent even as a relief measure.

Dumping of export wheat is quickly met by duties and tariffs, and Dr. Davis states that even if it were allowed to go on it would soon push world prices down enough to defeat the purpose. The purpose is, of course, to raise the wheat crop price in total.

Law of Supply and Demand.

The conclusion is that only an adjustment of acreage and production to needs will solve anything for the wheat grower. Left alone, bankruptcy would force many out of wheat growing, according to Dr. Davis, and the farm board is striving to find some less brutal way than this natural selection to aid the farmer.

There is in this paper as much sound sense as ever came from any government bureau. It is an interesting statement of the fact that supply and demand still govern. The great trouble with the farm relief program has been that so many people believed things that involve the whole world population and even the solar system could be settled by jiggling the prices of goods with the weight of government funds.

The problem is one of labor use; to find places where men displaced in farming by machinery can make a living. Aids as artificial as those condemned by the farm board economist would hurt more than they would help the efficient, low cost producer of wheat. They would enable more marginal men to remain as competitors a while longer.

FIXED TRUSTS POPULAR NOW, NEWEY SAYS

The current year promises to be a fixed trust year, as 1929 was a management trust year, in the opinion of John Newey, executive vice president of the Standard American corporation. He estimated that by the end of this year fixed trust shares sold the public would be in excess of $375,000,000.

"During the early part of 1930, when it was difficult to sell any kind of stock," Mr. Newey said, "there began to develop a very noticeable public acceptance for fixed trust shares. New fixed trust shares began to appear on every hand and most of them seemed to do very well. It is estimated that the amount of fixed trust sold during the last eighteen months is in excess of $275,000,000, and by the end of the year it is not unlikely that the figure will be increased by at least another $100,000,000."

Mt. Vernon Furnace Co. Buys St. Louis Factory

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Mount Vernon, Ill., Aug. 16.—The Mount Vernon Furnace and Manufacturing company, one of the fastest growing of Mount Vernon industries, has purchased the plant of the Universal Stove Corporation of St. Louis, and is moving the plant to this city. According to officers of the company, the addition of this plant will mean an increase of $50,000 to $60,000 in the annual pay roll of the company. The St. Louis plant manufactured gas heaters of various kinds. The addition of the new equipment will enable the local company to enlarge and diversify its line of heaters.

CHINA'S PLIGHT WILL BE FELT AROUND GLOBE

Propose Embargo on Gold Exports.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—The fall in the silver rate which has recently carried that metal to the lowest price in history, has attracted attention as one of the most serious accompaniments of the current world wide depression.

As a result of the decline, the purchasing power of that large section of the world's population resident in China has suffered serious curtailment and it is remarked that Europe and the western hemisphere cannot fail to feel the reactions of China's drastically reduced ability to buy abroad.

Due to lack of demand from the orient for cotton cloth, a condition said to be the result of the silver situation, cotton futures today dropped to the lowest level since 1926.

In most discussions of the decline in silver it has been assumed that the development was world wide, the result of overproduction and underconsumption of the metal. A Chinese authority, Prof. Paquan S. Hsu, has recently challenged this point of view, however. Prof. Hsu regards the fall in the price of silver exchange as largely a product of speculation on the Shanghai gold bar exchange. He proposes as remedies for the situation an embargo on the exportation of gold from China and the placing of a flexible tariff on silver imports ranging up to 50 per cent.

Production Normal.

According to Prof. Hsu, whose views have been widely published in China, production of silver has been normal. Consumption of silver in India has not been greatly decreased, he contends, while in China it has actually expanded.

Until recently, he asserts, the yen rate has exercised the most virulent influence upon silver exchange through the speculation in the gold bar. That is to say, most of the speculation in gold bars, vis-a-vis the silver exchange, has been carried on in anticipation of the yen movement. Whenever there was a rise in the yen there was a corresponding rise of the gold bar or a decline in silver.

Recently, due to the lifting of the gold embargo in Japan and the return of the yen to parity on a gold basis, movements of the yen have ceased to be the governing factor in silver exchange. Turning to the subject of the gold bar speculation, Prof. Hsu recounts that the gold bar price had been steadily rising all during 1929 and reached a high point on Jan. 7 of this year, when speculators, bankers, business men, and all interested parties began to be nervous. There was no agitation, however, he says, until the gold bar took another upward jump on Jan. 8.

Stories of Vanquished.

"It was on this memorable day in the history of the Shanghai gold bar exchange," Prof. Hsu says, "that the vanquished speculators, after shedding tears, broadcast the stories of the gold bar manipulation which finally culminated in the form of an agitation against speculation and for measures to bolster up the silver exchange. It may be added that were it not for that memorable sudden ascension of the gold bar price on that day the public agitation might have come much later or might even have been postponed indefinitely."

This speculation in the gold bar, Prof. Hsu says, was accompanied by the circulation of rumors of all kinds, such as the levying of import duties on silver by the United States and India, the dumping of India's demonetized coins, and others.

Whil Prof. Hsu agrees that in principle it is indisputable that China's monetary system should be thoroughly overhauled, he considers the suggestion untimely at this time.

TAX CONFERENCE IS INCLUDED IN BANKERS' MEET

The convention of the American Bankers' association in Cleveland, from Sept. 29 to Oct. 2, will include a tax conference devoted to controversial issues that have arisen from proposals to amend the federal statute relating to the taxation of national banks by the state, according to the schedule announced.

The question of branch, chain and group banking, which occupied so important a place in the discussions at last year's convention, will also figure prominently this year. The recommendation recently by the controller of the currency that branch banking be expanded within certain "trade areas," will form a basis for part of the discussion.

Other subjects expected to engage the attention of delegates, include: Protection of banks against banditry and apprehension and punishment of bank criminals; bank failures and unsatisfactory earnings resulting from changing economic conditions and problems of scientific bank management.

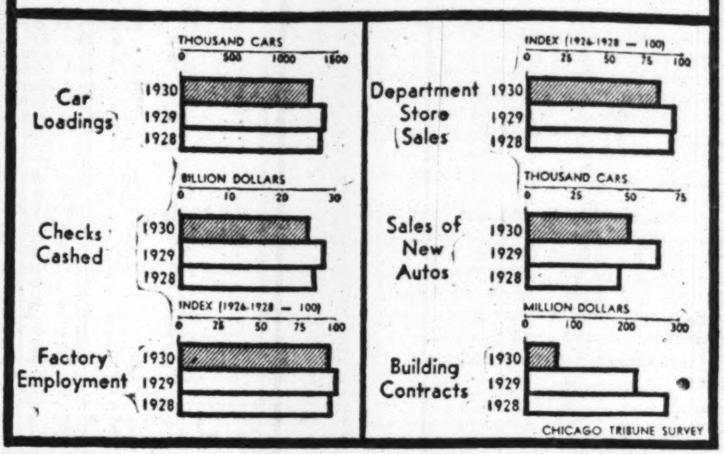
RECORD OF CHICAGO BUSINESS IN THE FIRST HALF OF THE YEAR



BIG BUSINESS NOT TO EMBARK ON WAGE CUTTING

This Said to Be View of Executives.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—Whatever other means may be adopted to put corporations back on a large paying basis, general wage cutting will not be the method employed, according to business executives, Wall street observers and business statistical bureaus.

J. A. FARRELL.

Most of the authorities regard the danger of wage cutting past with the approach of fall, when a revival of business is generally expected. They regard the worst has happened as fully stated in the report of the bureau of labor which covered reductions through June 15. This report showed a very small percentage of wage reductions. Although it indicated that the average income of workers had been reduced to a large extent through part time operations and cuts in operating forces.

The United States Steel corporation is generally given credit for having pronounced a policy against wage cutting just at the time when serious consideration was being given to the subject by executives, about three months ago.

Still Holds Good.

At that time James A. Farrell, president of the corporation, in his talk at the annual meeting of the Iron and Steel institute, said:

"I heard a man say the other day that wages should come down, I said, O, no, wages are not coming down; you can make up your mind to that fact. If you are going out to sell your goods and eliminate your profits, and expect to get it out of the man in the mills, why you are greatly mistaken."

Several times since then, when Mr. Farrell or other executives or the United States Steel corporation were asked regarding the attitude of the corporation on this matter, inquires were referred to Mr. Farrell's statement as "still holding good."

The report of the labor bureau shows that in the months up to June 15 only one steel plant reported a reduction in wages, made in January, and this was but of 2.5 per cent and affected only 42 employés. The following month no reductions were reported, and in the month ended March 15 four plants reported a reduction averaging 2.3 per cent and affected 492 employés. In the month ending April 15 three reported a cut averaging 2.2 per cent and 494 employés and in the month ended June 15, the last period covered by the report, six plants reduced wages an average of 4.5 per cent and 1,600 employés were affected.

In all, the number of wage earners in the steel industry who have been affected by reduction is 2,679 less than one per cent of the total number employed.

Hits Working Forces, Hours.

In reductions in working forces and hours, the result of the present depression has been far greater. Of 1,775 plants making iron and steel, one per cent were idle in June, 47 per cent were running full time and the remainder were running on part time. Only 22 per cent, however, were operating with full normal forces.

Standards Statistics company, in a report on a survey recently made on this subject, says:

"In spite of the fact that wage reductions, by both direct and indirect methods, have been fairly numerous during recent months, the majority of industrial employers, while perhaps of the opinion that a general downward readjustment of labor rates is justified, are opposing such a movement because of the retarding influence they believe it would exert on a trade revival.

"Although other wage cuts probably will be made in the early future, it is at the present time questionable that a widespread slashing of rates will be witnessed.

"Employment in manufacturing industries, which currently is 13 per cent less than a year ago, is expected to register gradual improvement between now and winter. Resumption of more nearly normal operations in the automobile, iron and steel, and numerous other trades is likely to result in a reengagement during the near term of many persons released earlier this year and in the extension of working time of most of those now employed."

DEMAND FOR ELECTRIC POWER RISING; MAY BE BUSINESS TURN

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—The sharp increase in electric power consumption in the last two weeks has been widely discussed in business circles as signifying possibly a turn in industry. The increase in demand has been substantial enough to suggest a change in the business trend, as the current output is practically even with that of a year ago and well above the output of June and July.

Public utility interests express the opinion that a continuance of the upward curve of output for another two or three weeks will be a more conclusive symptom of business improvement than the gain of the last two weeks.

As the increased demand for power coincides with the worst of the drought period it is not unlikely that a considerable part of the gain resulted by the starting up of auxiliary water pumping stations throughout the drought area. It became necessary for municipal and private water supply companies to operate these plants because the drought caused a general failure of their gravity supply systems.

Another factor, in the opinion of electric power authorities, was the much increased pumping for irrigation in many parts of the southwest, this also being an outgrowth of the drought. The drought influence on electric power consumption is indicated by the fact that the New England territory and the Pacific coast, both of which escaped the drought, contributed little to the increase.

Electric power consumption in the country as a whole has been holding up remarkably well in the face of the business depression. Consumption in the first five months of the year was slightly ahead of the same period last year, but in June and July there was a considerable drop from the 1929 output level. The August recovery, irrespective of its cause, has been an interesting feature of a very slow midsummer business, and if output continues to increase during the remainder of the month it will doubtless be looked upon as a significant development.

BUTTER FUTURES FORGE AHEAD AS SUPPLY SHRINKS

Butter futures spurted forward on the Chicago Mercantile exchange during the last week, the volume of business continuing heavy. To date this month more than 45,000,000 pounds of butter for November delivery have changed hands, with a total value of approximately $18,500,000.

The prime incentive in the sharp advance was the government storage report issued on Aug. 12 as of Aug. 1. It showed holdings of 6,000,000 pounds under the supply in storage a year ago. Acting under this bullish factor, coupled with daily reports showing less butter being stored than on similar dates last year, the November delivery touched 42 cents before the week ended.

This high point—the peak level for the summer—was a gain of 1½ cents over the close of the previous week and represented a gain of $288 per car. Prices eased slightly on Friday under the influence of heavy profit taking, but the delivery closed with a net gain of 1⅛ cents per pound.

Optimism prevails in trading circles. It is believed the higher level will be sustained, but it is pointed out that last year witnessed the largest supply of butter stored in history. Therefore no shortage of butter is expected this winter, nor is it likely that the price will mount to such a degree that retail consumers will suffer.

The listless attitude of the egg market continued. A huge excess on hand makes trading cautious. Statistical information in the next few weeks will be watched closely, and any information one way or the other should result in prompt price changes. The November egg delivery ended the week at 28 cents, compared to 28⅜ cents at the close of the previous week.

Weekly Debits Decrease, Reserve Bank Reports

Debits to individual deposit account reported to the Federal Reserve bank of Chicago for the week ended Aug. 13, 1930, by 235 banks in thirty-eight leading clearing house cities in the seventh federal reserve district, aggregate $1,372,814,000, a decrease of 7.2 per cent compared with a week ago [$1,478,631,000]. Compared with the corresponding week of last year [$1,788,343,000], a decrease of 23.2 per cent was shown.

Offerings of Bonds Strike Year's Low

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—New offerings of bonds this week aggregated only $33,514,000, the smallest total for any week in the year to date. August is usually a dull month in so far as new offerings are concerned. Last week's new bond issues totaled $71,310,000 and during the corresponding week last year new offerings in the amount of $31,997,000 were marketed.

State and municipal financing this week accounted for the bulk of the new offerings with a total of $23,414,000. The principal issues in this group were $15,000,000 city of Detroit, [Mich.] 2⅞ per cent one year notes, which were offered on a 2.70 per cent basis, and an issue of $5,000,000 state of West Virginia 4 and 4½ per cent highway bonds, priced to yield 2.75 to 4.00 per cent. The latter issue was reported sold within a few hours after offering.

Single Utility Issue.

The public utility financing consisted of a single issue of $8,000,000 Indianapolis Power and Light company 5s of 1957, marketed at par. The only foreign loan offered was an issue of $2,000,000 Canadian National railways 4½ per cent equipment trust certificates priced to net 4.70 per cent.

Offerings of bonds by groups for this and last week follow:

	This week.	Last week.
State and municipal	$23,414,000	$4,625,000
Public utility	8,000,000	1,025,000
Foreign	2,000,000	20,000,000
Industrial	100,000	45,000,000
Railroad	....	660,000
Total	$33,514,000	$71,310,000

It is not expected that many large issues of bonds will be brought out in the remainder of the month, but the present plans of several investment houses call for considerable new financing immediately after Labor day.

May Run Heavier.

This holiday usually is considered the line of demarcation between the summer quiet and autumn activity. Public utility financing will probably play an important rôle next month. New municipal financing is expected to run much heavier and it is considered likely that several railroad issues will be brought out.

Among those mentioned in the railroad class are bonds of the Cleveland Union Terminal and the Cincinnati Union Terminal. Industrial financing is of a doubtful quantity although it is believed a high grade industrial bond issue would meet a ready response. Not much new foreign financing is expected until much later in the year.

CHICAGO CURB TO MOVE INTO NEW QUARTERS

Clarence G. Troup, president of the Chicago curb exchange, announced yesterday that the exchange will take up its new quarters in the 332 South La Salle street building on Sept. 2. The trading floor will comprise 3,000 square feet, with a bridge leading to the trading floor of the Board of Trade. Executive offices of the curb association will be in the same building.

The lease on the space runs for ten years, with ample facilities for expansion, according to officials. Provision has been made for sixty-two private telephone wires leading to most of the brokerage houses in the financial district.

The exchange, which was organized a little more than two years ago, will hold special ceremonies when the new quarters are opened.

READJUSTMENT OF HOLDINGS IS TRUST PROBLEM

Dividend Income Seen Important.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—Readjustment of their portfolios to compare more closely with their capital structures has been one of the problems with which investment trusts have been faced as a result of receding opportunities to take advantage of market appreciation to produce income, it has been noted in financial circles recently.

Because trusts have not been in a position many times this year to sell securities in their portfolios at prices higher than those at which they were purchased, the significance of dividend income has become far greater than many of the trusts expected, it is said. The result of realizing this has been to buy stocks which would insure at least sufficient income to meet obligations particularly on senior securities, it has been pointed out.

Advances Theory.

One economist has said that investment trusts may sell different classes of securities in proportion to the amounts of securities of those classes held in its portfolio. If, for example, a trust devotes one-third of its portfolio to bonds, it may sell proportionately that amount of bonds. On the theory that the interest which must be paid is secured by the income from the bonds.

This is, to a large extent, the principle on which the British investment trusts are set up, and it has been temporarily imposed upon trusts in this country by the failure of the stock markets to show the appreciation on which our trusts were originally based, it is asserted.

Picture Changes.

In the beginning, American trusts based their greatest hopes of prosperous existence on the rising value of securities. This was particularly true among those formed in 1928 and the first nine months of 1929, and has been sufficiently justified, as a basis, by the enormous appreciations which had been realized.

Since then, however, with the sharp and sudden declines last fall and the failure of any substantial recovery in values since that time, the picture is changed, observers have noted. The income from appreciation is gone temporarily, while the necessity for meeting obligations on preferred stocks and bonds still remains.

BY FRED HARVEY.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—Today's two hour stock market gave Wall street a headache but furnished little else in the way of tangible results. Prices jerked up and down every few minutes. Most of them finished about where they started, changes of more than a fraction being few.

What few traders were on hand were divided into three distinct groups—viz.: Those seeking to take profits following yesterday's rally, professional bears trying for a further reaction, and a third group more or less busy with belated short covering. The bears got the bulge in the early dealings driving a long list of prominent stocks down 1 to 3 points with the help of realizing sales. Support appeared in season, however, and for an hour or so the dealings were a seesaw affair with price changes, narrow as they were, exhibiting the wildest confusion as they yielded now to one of the opposing elements and now to another.

List Rallies.

As the list swung into the last half hour some good buying made its appearance and the general list rallied not only recovering from its early lows but registering a number of new highs for the recovery. Gains had a shade the better of it in the final quotations.

Pivotal shares as a rule maintained a good tone, with somewhat increased buying in Standard Oil of New Jersey, Consolidated Gas and one or two others in progress. United States Steel, after dropping 1⅛ points, rallied rather briskly and ended the day with a net gain of nearly a point. American Can, Case Threshing Machine, and other shares which soared in the bear rout yesterday sold off sharply in the first half hour, but most of them rebounded in impressive shape toward the last. Can was only fractionally lower at the close.

Radio came in for a good deal of attention, with most of the activity on the selling side due to the company's showing for the first half of the year. The closing sale registered a dip of more than a point below last night's closing figure. Canadian Pacific, which was heavily sold a few days ago on reports that the present dividend might not be earned, was a comparatively strong spot, running up nearly 6 points.

Transactions amounted to only about 700,000 shares.

Rains Threaten.

With a murky sky offering a threat of more rain and additional reports of rains in the drought area, the crop scare subsided further, robbing the bears of their best selling argument. Wall street had time for calmer reflection on the farm situation the last few days and apparently has come to the conclusion that, while it is serious, pessimism over crop damage and its probable effect in hampering business revival probably was overdone. The crop scare undoubtedly halted the market's recovery, but some observers profess to see some good investment buying going on the last week or so by people who refuse to be stampeded by the mood of the moment.

Top yesterday, $10.00; average, $9.15.

Receipts at Chicago Monday, 18,000 cattle, 38,000 hogs, and 19,000 sheep.

The few hogs available on the week-end session were lacking in quality and sold on a "catch as catch can" basis. Most sales were strong considering the poorer quality.

Fancy light weights eligible to $10.75 were absent, the best available averaging 140@160 lbs, and 230@260 lbs at $10.25. There was a good deal of inquiry for selected 170@200 lb averages. Poorer quality also forced the general average price down 15c at $9.55. Buying by local interests centered on packing sows mostly, resulting in a fairly good clearance. Only 2,000 remained at the close, including some hogs held off the market.

September Hogs Bring $10.80.

Additional gains were scored in the hog futures market yesterday, September mediums topping the list at $10.80, the highest price paid for any contract on the hog futures market since March 14, when May light were sold at $11.00. September contracts late last March were selling at $10.00.

Light weights for September sold at $10.60, with heavy grades at the same figure. A load of October light brought $9.75. September contracts closed $1.15 above a week ago.

Decreased supplies and broader eastern demand sent hog prices skyward during the last week in face of unchanged prices on the wholesale trade. Local interests balked at the sharp upturn near the close and put up some of the smallest droves of the season on Thursday and Friday.

Outsiders, however, bought 22 per cent of total arrivals against 15 per cent a week ago and 15 per cent a year ago, this fact carrying out earlier reports that there is an acute shortage of light weights at eastern slaughtering points The week's general average price of hogs advanced 35c at $9.30, but compares with $10.90 a year ago and with $11.80 two years ago.

Sharp losses in cattle prices earlier in the week were recovered later and the market, as a whole, was about in line with the previous week. The general average at $8.85, exactly the same as a week ago, compared with $14.85 a year ago and with $15.10 two years ago. The increase in receipts came during the first three days and was followed by meager offerings during the last half of the week.

A slight improvement in the wholesale market for fresh beef added zest to buying near the close, the high point. Yearlings outsold all other cattle by a big margin, bringing up to $11.00, while prime 1,300 lb steers had to go at $10.25. A week ago both light and heavy steers sold at $11.00.

Producers Holding Lambs.

Sheep receipts are running below normal for the time of year. Last week's arrivals were below any corresponding week in several years. Western producers are reported holding stock on the range because of the ruinously low level of prices paid for thin lightweights, which comprise a liberal share of offerings.

In spite of the fact that the west is reported to have 1,600,000 more lambs than a year ago, the western season to date total at Chicago is behind 1929 and 1928. The market made a sharp comeback following last Monday's break and the first $10.00 lambs in recent weeks appeared near the close. The week's general average, however, is 10c under a week ago at $8.90, and compares with $13.10 a year ago and with $14.50 two years ago.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 18,000 cattle, 38,000 hogs, and 19,000 sheep, against 18,117 cattle, 40,162 hogs, and 16,562 sheep a week ago, and 26,829 cattle, 42,409 hogs, and 21,215 sheep the corresponding day a year ago. Next week's receipts are estimated at 45,000 cattle, 115,000 hogs, and 95,000 sheep, against 52,101 cattle, 119,684 hogs, and 96,943 sheep a year ago.

ANOTHER FAIR DAY IS ENJOYED BY STOCKS HERE

Noblitt Sparks Up 2 Points in Chicago Trading.

Another fair day was enjoyed by the Chicago Stock exchange, with the gains far exceeding the recessions in the regular Saturday short session. However, the market was not particularly energetic in its movements and it contented itself with a light skip here and a lighter hop there. So the consequence was most of the gains were merely fractional.

The turnover was moderate, amounting to 92,500 shares for the two hour period, and there appeared to be no special favorites. Insull Utility, up ⅛ at 59⅝, saw the greatest activity, with sales of 10,000 shares. Otherwise sales were fairly well distributed along the list.

Noblitt-Sparks, in the automotives, made one of the day's best gains by advancing 2 points, thereby well demonstrating the tempo of the market. Bendix and Borg-Warner each made a gain of ¼, and Auburn slowed down to lose 2 points in closing at 112.

Investment Trusts Firmer.

The investment trusts generally were firmer than they have been for some days. Corporation Securities, Continental Chicago, Chicago Corporation and National Securities all made fractional advances.

In the general section Foote Brothers Gear came in for a bit more interest again, but after it was all over there was no change in price. Lincoln Printing and Hall Printing, both eased upward. Morgan Lithographing in closing at 14½ was 1¾ to the good. Lion Oil and Mosser Leather each gained a point. U. S. Gypsum closed at 44, up 1 point. Electric Household gained fractionally and Jefferson Electric slipped ½.

Majestic Household and Grigsby-Grunow were considerably less active than they have been in days. The turnover for the former was only 5,850 shares. It closed at 47½ off ¾. Grigsby closing at 14 was off a fraction.

In the utility division Commonwealth Edison was extremely restrained in its gait. It edged up ¼—the smallest change it has experienced in either direction for a long time. Middle West at 28 stood still. Public Service of Northern Illinois $100 par gained 1½. Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line was off ⅛ and Cities Service suffered the same fractional loss.

Cites Stock Values.

Otis & Co., in their weekly compilation report the fifty most active stocks traded in on the exchange during the week ended Aug. 16 had a market value of $2,330,105,338 at the close of business as compared with $2,356,316,238 for the previous week. This was a decrease of $26,210,900, or 1.12 per cent.

The report shows that thirty-four of these stocks were listed and traded in last year. These stocks had a market value of $1,532,238,132 yesterday as compared with $2,415,271,951 on Aug. 17, 1929, a decrease of $883,033,819, or 36.56 per cent.

More than 280,000 Take Stock in A. T. & T. Offer

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—Not more than one-third of 1 per cent of the rights recently offered to stockholders of American Telephone and Telegraph company were allowed to lapse, the company estimated today in a report on results of the offering. This was the percentage lapsed in the offering of 1928.

More than 280,000 subscribers took stock in the offering which closed Aug. 1. Subscriptions under the single payment plan amounted to 77 per cent, compared with 77.8 per cent in 1928. About 81 per cent of the total shares subscribed were under the single payment plan, compared with 83.8 per cent under the previous offer. The average of shares per subscription was 9.2 compared with 6.99 in 1928. Approximately $225,000,000 cash has been received in connection with these subscriptions.

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

Disposition on the part of local traders to take profits on all bulges in grains in a market that is not backed up strongly with outside or local buying is responsible for numerous sharp reactions. The wheat market especially has been so choppy of late that the big professionals are using more caution. Sentiment in wheat is more mixed, due to uncertainty as to the action of corn. The corn bulls, while believers in higher prices later in the year, are constantly afraid of rains starting a selling movement and they evened up for the week, expecting lower prices.

"An American wheat crop of 820,000,000 bu and about 270,000,000 to 280,000,000 bu carried over makes a supply of 1,100,000,000 bu, or 450,000,000 bu above normal consumption," says the Uhlmann Grain company. "Exports from all of North America for the first six weeks this season are only about 8,000,000 bu more than last year, so Europe does not seem to show the want of extraordinary requirements."

A good increase in the visible supply of wheat is expected on Monday. The trade, however, does not pay as much attention to these figures as in former years, despite the fact that they are the largest on record.

Corn traders, while bullish on the outcome of the season, expressed the belief that farmers will hold their corn back until they are more satisfied with the crop prospects and expect to get materially higher prices later in the season.

CASH·GRAIN N·E·W·S

Foreign demand for North American wheat at the seaboard was generally reported as slow, while the pool was credited in Winnipeg messages as having sold around 1,000,000 bu since the close on Friday. Basis at the gulf was easier with No. 1 hard for last half August quoted at 6¼c over Chicago September asked, and first half September at 6¾c over asked. At Omaha the basis was firm.

The farm board continues to move wheat out of St. Louis in order to make storage room, and shipments of 178,000 bu were made from that market yesterday to eastern ports. Country offerings to arrive in the west and southwest remain light, while receipts at Chicago yesterday were the smallest in a number of weeks. No. 1 red and hard winter generally sold at September price to ¼c over No. 2 red at September to ¼c under, and No. 2 hard at ¼@½c under the future.

Eastern demand for cash corn remains fairly active with sales by Chicago handlers of 165,000 bu. Purchases to arrive aggregated 55,000 bu, mainly 5 to 10 day shipment at $1.00¾@1.01½. The spot basis was steady to firm with No. 1 and No. 2 mixed, 3@3¾c over September, yellow, 3@3½c over and white, 5¼@5½c over the future.

Charters were made for 150,000 bu oats to Georgian bay. Purchases to arrive were only 5,000 bu. The spot basis was steady with No. 2 white, September price to ¼c over and No. 3 white, ¾@1c under September. Local handlers sold 27,000 bu barley for shipment. No. 2 rye on track was quoted at 4½c over September.

Official receipts of grain at Chicago Saturday: Wheat, 69 cars; corn, 228 cars; oats, 152 cars; rye, 2 cars; barley, 19 cars.

LARD BREAKS AFTER BULGE

Good buying of lard early advanced prices 7½c to 15c on futures yesterday, which brought out selling by holders and packing interests which, combined with the late break in grains, had a depressing influence on values. The close was around the inside, with net losses of 5c to 16c. Liverpool was strong and 1s to 1s 3d higher. Export clearances were 112,000 lbs of lard and 25,000 lbs of bacon. Hog prices were strong. CORN CONDITION LOW; HEAVY LOSS SINCE AUG. 1

"That the yield of corn this year will be low seems certain," says E. H. Miller, the J. E. Bennett & Co.'s crop statistician.

"Just now it is impossible to tell, but deterioration has been so rapid and the bushel loss so great that it is very difficult to estimate the extent of the damage on any given date. On July 26 our reports showed a condition of 69.6, indicating a crop of 2,495,000,000 bu. On Aug. 11 the government gave a condition of 62, indicating a crop of 2,212,000,000 bu, stating that this was as of Aug. 1. Our survey of eleven of the principal corn growing states suggests an average date of Aug. 9, indicating a further loss of 174,000,000 bu from the government's estimate on these states.

Since the reports were received many sections have had rain and it is impossible to tell how much improvement they will make in the crop and whether or not the food prospects in sections favored by rains will be offset by continued deterioration. Condition is very spotted in all states, ranging from normal to 5 per cent of normal. Details by states, with the last three ciphers omitted in the yield, follow:

Facts That Move Security Prices—

THREE questions face every thoughtful investor: (1) How can I secure a good income with adequate protection for the money I have invested or plan to invest in securities? (2) How can I at the same time substantially increase the value of my security holdings without risking my capital by taking needless chances? (3) If economic facts eventually must be the basis of security price movements where can I get those facts impartially set forth?

Investors in increasing numbers are finding help in answering the above questions by getting their investment information from THE WALL STREET JOURNAL. Here the forces that make security prices go up or down are analysed and interpreted daily by a nation-wide staff of trained experts devoting all their time and energy to the discovery, and more important still, the interpretation of every item of significance.

DEPRESSION IS BEHIND DROP IN LONDON STOCKS

Foreign Bond Market Is Doing Better.

BY SIDNEY CAVE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

[Copyright: 1930: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Doleful conditions developed in the London stock markets this week. Pronounced factors were the holiday influence, the renewed uncertainty of Wall street and the continued depression of American business, the cheerless trend of the continental bourses and the continuance of weakness in the commodity market mainly rubber, tin and copper.

The heavy selling by Wall street of international industrial securities and also American and Canadian railroad stocks led the liquidation in which large amounts of local stock pawned with the banks came out to accentuate the depression.

Practically the only bright spot was the gilt edged investment section, but even this developed erratically owing to the forced selling by investors.

Derive Benefit.

British government stocks continue to derive a benefit from speculative securities, some of which are still driving money into safety first issues. The five per cent war loan has established a land mark in financial history by touching 104, while the five per cent conversion loan reached 105. The chief reason apparently for this rise in the war loan is that the market considers that there will not be any conversion of this stock for a considerable period which is diverting the bulk of the available support in the funds market to long dated issues. There is abundant evidence that New York's interest in such high class London securities is growing, which is regarded all to the good from the point of view of London financial circles.

Cheap money conditions remain about the only favoring influence, but this effect has been largely exhausted by the recent improvement in the investment departments, so it is not surprising that more sober views are being expressed concerning the fall outlook for markets generally.

Continue Favorable.

Foreign exchanges continue favorable to London, the dollar sterling rate showing signs of increasing the commercial demand for dollars with a continued tendency for foreign funds to leave New York. City circles doubt whether American bankers will be confirmed in their view that gold will be shipped from New York to London this fall and refuse to worry regarding the sterling dollar position for some time ahead, chiefly on the ground of the possible effects of the great drought in America.

The foreign bond market is showing up slightly better with Austrian and German scripts firmer and a welcome rally in Brazil and Sao Paulo issues, the chief being the publication of the first month's result of the new coffee realization scheme governing the latest Sao Paulo coffee loan.

Argentine issues, mainly rails, were bought on the assumption that Argentina will benefit from America's drought troubles. The market regards the Argentine section as one affording considerable scope for recovery in the next twelve months.

BANK CLEARINGS FOR WEEK ARE DOWN 34.5 PCT.

Bank clearings this week receded further, this time a little more than is customary, although payments through the banks in the second week of August are usually close to the lowest point of the year.

The total this week, as reported to Dun's Review for leading cities in the United States of $8,286,650,000 is 34.5 per cent below that for the corresponding week of last year. At New York the figures this week are $5,588,000,000 and show a loss of 9 per cent, while for the cities outside of New York the total of $2,698,650,000 is 22.8 per cent smaller.

The decline this year now affects every city reporting. Heretofore, the weekly returns have shown gains at a number of the leading centers in comparison with totals for the corresponding week of 1928; while clearings at New York City this week are slightly larger than they were at that time, nearly all of the other centers now show a loss. The tendency at this time is clearly in the direction of a lower level than in either of the two preceding years.

FARM AND GARDEN

INDIAN MAIDEN SEES FUTURE OF TRIBE ON FARM

BY PAUL POTTER.

Farming is the logical future and ultimate salvation for the 1,800 Menominee Indians in Shawano county, Wis., according to Miss Alice Oshkosh, 20 year old leader of the tribe since the death of her father, Chief Ernest Oshkosh, in 1929. A reservation of several thousand acres has been provided in this scenic country of seemingly little industry.

The educated girl lives on a farm near Keshena, which is not far from the famed Keshena falls and the other scenic wonders of the ten townships set aside for use of the Indians. She quietly ponders the problems of her people.

Points the Way Ahead.

"Because of the lack of industry, farming is the logical future for the Menominee India. If the individuals would prove up on their places to which they are entitled and which they can obtain by filing claims, the tribe would find it would do its members good.

"The farm on which I live with my mother contains five 40 acre tracts, of which 37 acres are cleared. Crops include corn and grain and garden produce. Eighteen head of stock consist of high grade Guernsey and Holstein cows and in addition, three horses. The place is being run by a relative, who has leased it from us.

Enough Farms Available.

"Tractors are found on several farms on the reservation. Owners include Mose Tucker, Fred and Herman Fredenberg and Joe Pecore. Each individual is entitled to 80 acres, which means that all of the 400 to 500 families could file claims and develop farms if they were inclined. There is a large sawmill at Neopit in the heart of the reservation, but at present it is idle, and reports are that it is not profitable."

Nearly all of the Indians are receiving fair education, Miss Oshkosh points out. The Indian school provides courses including first and second year high school studies. Marvin Catlin teaches agriculture as part of the curriculum. Many leave the reservation and attend Haskell at Lawrence, Kas., the school at Tomah, Wis., or the Indian school at Flandreau, S. D.

Other Income Sources Cited.

Much of the ten townships is covered with forest lands. Nearly all of it is described as good to excellent farming country, with some sandy soil in the northeast portion. Harry Ainsworth serves the United States government and the Indians as district farmer.

In addition to what incomes the various families derive from farming, filling stations, stores and souvenir sales, the government pays what is known as "annuities," which vary according to the amount received as interest from Indian funds held in trust.

WEATHER INJURES PRIVETS.

Last year our hedge of privet began to wither and the foliage died off. In the fall we cut it to the ground. This spring it sprouted out nicely except in a few places, where it seemed quite dead. In the last few weeks we notice that it is slowly withering again. Could you recommend some means of saving this hedge?

M. F. B.

REPLY.

Winter injury is the common cause of death of certain species of privet. Parts of the hedge may die out during the summer as a result of winter injury preceding the growing season. Control measures are to prune out the dead parts.

PRUNING BRIDAL WREATH.

Could you please let me know when to trim a bush called bridal wreath and does it need winter protection?

H. W. W.

REPLY.

The summer flowering spirea requires rather severe pruning in comparison to the early spring flowering type of spirea bush. The process consists of removing all the old flower stalks still retained on the plant and thinning out the oldest and weakest canes to the base of the plant. A manure mulch may add to the fertility of the soil, but winter injury usually is the result of winter killing of the twigs, especially of the variety known as Spirea Thunbergi. Where this occurs Spira Argutea is said to be preferable.

NEW RED ROSE IS NAMED FOR FLOWER GUILD

French Creation Honors Cheer Purveyors.

As a symbol of achievement of a national association of leading men and women interested in flowers and other plants, a new rose originated by Charles Mallerin of Grenoble, France, has been named the "National Flower Guild" rose.

The Chicago branch of the National Plant, Flower and Fruit guild is considered one of the strongest centers of the organization.

Several years of rigid trials have been given the new variety in test plots at West Grove, Pa., with the result that dissemination of the new red rose will start about Nov. 1. Chief among its virtues, according to Mrs. Olive Hyde Foster, secretary of the national guild, are its adaptation to the rose garden, its value for cutting, its deep color, and its large size.

The flower begins as a pointed bud with recurving petals until full blown. The individual flowers come singly on stems which, if pruned low in the spring, will develop a bloom approximating choice greenhouse flowers.

Leaders in the Chicago branch of the guild, which has been honored in the naming of the new rose, include Theodore V. Purcell, Mrs. R. R. McCormick, Mrs. A. T. Martin, and Fenton Kelsey, and many others in what is one of the most important member guilds of the organization.

Weeds Not Held Blessing as New Theory Ousts Old

Weeds are not such a blessing in disguise to the farmer as some one once enthusiastically declared who believed that without weeds the farmer would not cultivate and thereby break the crust and make a mulch. Without weeds, little need for cultivation would be found, according to modern theory, New York soil fertility specialists assert.

Imports of Furs Fail to Supplant U. S. Production

Furs were imported last year from nearly 80 different countries by the United States in addition to an annual production of about $70,000,000 worth of pelts including those of the territory of Alaska, says the United States department of agriculture. Furs are ninth on the list of imports and twentieth on the list of exports.

RATS SAID TO BE "CHOICY" ABOUT WHERE THEY LIVE

Rats have a natural aptitude for selecting favorable homesites, says the United States bureau of biological survey in advising farmers that all the discouragements that can be given the rodents will reduce the "boarders'" comfort and numbers.

Tight granaries with dead air spaces filled with broken brick or small stones will check the rats from getting too easy a food supply. Convenient runways will be harder for them to build secluded nesting places if holes in buildings and foundations are filled and protected against invasion. Sheet metal nailed into corners and along sills and timbers will forestall pests trying to gnaw their way to food.

Make sure that a rat cannot follow along a pipe line into the house or outbuildings, the survey advises. Pour cement in the opening through the wall or use sheet metal. Traps, dogs and poisons also are recommended for destroying rats when they appear in numbers, but it is suggested that it is easier to discourage them from taking up residence than it is to kill them after they have become established in comfortable quarters.

MODERN FIXTURES BRING COMFORTS OF LIFE TO HOGS

Shower baths and drinking fountains for hogs are being recommended by L. E. Hazen of the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical college.

He reports that the hog has been the least able to resist the high temperatures prevalent the last few weeks after a study of all farm animals that have been suffering from the heat.

Comfort, adequate shade, and plenty of clean, fresh water are said to be indispensable to successful gain in weight during hot weather. Farmers have been advised to cool off their hogs by using a power sprayer, such as those used in orchards and gardens, setting up the water spray in shade and giving the bath service for about two hours each afternoon.

The drinking fountains successfully combat a large proportion of disease among hogs, Mr. Hazen reports. Hog wallows and open troughs are subject to pollution and are unsuitable for drinking water for the animals.

VENERABLE RAIL TRADITION MAY GO OVERBOARD

Division at Mississippi Is Threatened.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—A venerable tradition of the railroad field threatens to go by the board as a result of recent carrier acquisitions, it was said in informed circles this week.

These developments were acquisition of control of the Missouri Pacific railroad by the Van Sweringens and acquisition of the Chicago and Alton by the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. The tradition they effected was that eastern and western railroads terminate at the Mississippi.

This tradition has been upheld vigorously by railroads in the past. Failure of the Gould transcontinental system early in the century was in part ascribed to the fact that it violated this tradition by crossing the Father of Waters. More recently L. F. Loree, whose merger activities have not been without interest to other railroads, sought to break the tradition by the formation of a fifth trunk line. He also was unsuccessful.

Traffic Diversion.

Whenever it appeared likely that an eastern railroad would break this tradition the western roads would retaliate by diverting their traffic to eastern lines that had adhered to the tradition. This was an effectual method for maintaining the tradition untarnished.

However, this hoary tradition received a blow when the interstate commerce commission announced its final consolidation plan in December. This plan revived the fifth trunk line idea in substantially the same form as put forward by Mr. Loree. The plans of both the commission and Mr. Loree called for linking the Lehigh Valley with the Wabash, the effect of such an operation being to form a system extending from New York to Kansas City and Omaha.

This year it became known that O. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen of Cleveland, owners of the Chesapeake and Ohio and allied lines, Nickel Plate and Erie, had extended the mileage of roads under their control to more than 20,000 by purchase of the Missouri Pacific. This put them in control of roads extending from New York to Denver and El Paso and with connections to Salt Lake City and San Francisco.

See Linking Possible.

Mindful of the Mississippi tradition, the Van Sweringens made it clear that no consolidation of their eastern with their western systems was contemplated. However, the fact that they control eastern and western systems is still a matter of discussion in the railroad field and the eventual linking of their two systems is not considered impossible.

Recently the Baltimore and Ohio, which had originally sought the Wabash for a western extension but which was allocated the Chicago and Alton by the commission, bought the latter road. This put the Baltimore and Ohio across the Mississippi to Kansas City. In this case the attitude of respect to the tradition maintained by the Van Sweringens was disregarded. Control of the Chicago and Alton was made by direct purchase by the Baltimore and Ohio and the management of the latter road intends to put the two roads into a single system.

COTTON LOWEST SINCE 1926; HEDGING SALES A FEATURE

Cotton prices yesterday dropped to the lowest since 1926, when December in New York sold down to 11.51c. The low point yesterday was 11.53c. In 1926 there was a record crop, 17,977,000 bales.

Consumption this year has been greatly reduced by the political situation in India, China and Russia. The latter country, however, has recently bought 4,000 bales of cotton, which is to load at Galveston, the first time in years that there have been shipments from that port to Russia. The cotton market is suffering not only from reduced consumption but reduced speculative buying which of late has been too small to absorb the hedging pressure and sustain prices.

Liquidation has been heavy of late and buying support poor. Close readers of the weather map think they see indications of a breaking in the drought. Only light scattered showers have fallen so far. Reports from the south say that in many sections the crop is already made.

Closing trades were at the lowest of the day and season, with futures in Chicago off 25 to 30 points and other markets off 29 to 37 points. Spots declined 30 points, equal to $1.50 a bale. New York was down to 11.60c, New Orleans, 11.10c, Galveston and Houston, 11.25c. Liverpool futures were off 4 points and spot sales 3,000 bales. Prices follow:

BARE 100 MILLION GETAWAY FUND OF SOVIET CLIQUE

Salt Cash Abroad for Fear Regime Falls.

BY LORIMER HAMMOND.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Aug. 16.—One hundred million dollars of "getaway" money is now being salted down in foreign banks for the private use of the innermost clique of soviet politicians in case of a sudden fall of the Red régime.

They don't think it is going to happen, but they aren't taking any chances.

Levy Foreign Trade Profits.

The collection of their $100,000,000 nest egg started a little over two weeks ago through a secret order sent from the Kremlin to the chief soviet trade agents in London, Berlin, and Paris. The order was signed by Mikoyan, Moscow's foreign trade commissar—himself one of the prospective getaway boys. The order instructs each leading soviet trade representative abroad to set aside 50 per cent of all cash profits realized and to hand the money over to a certain confidential operator specially appointed by the Kremlin clique to hold their secret fund.

The name of this operator is a carefully guarded mystery to all except a half dozen of the highest leaders. Not even the soviet ambassadors, consuls, or chief trade managers are supposed to know who gets the money or where it is kept.

In addition to this hoard, which will be called the "padlocked fund," there is another secret deposit of an equal size now being made to provide for the cost of communist propaganda abroad.

Have to Urge Stalin.

While Dictator Joseph Stalin has consented to permit the formation of the padlocked fund for the convenience of the closest associates in the event a soviet smashup makes their escape necessary, I am informed that he does not favor such measures personally, and only sanctioned it after extreme pressure was brought to bear upon him recently by more prudent members of his group—particularly Voroshilov, commander in chief of the Red army; Koganovitch, president of the supreme economic council; and Molotiv, executive head of the third international, member of the political bureau, and actual director of soviet foreign policy.

For himself, I am told, Stalin has never been inclined to try to feather his nest or to insure himself a safe and quiet future outside of Russia. That is not in his line. The safe and quiet life doesn't appeal to him at all. It was he who made Leon Trotzky and other prudent commissars very nervous three years ago when on coming into power in Russia he took over every cent of their original getaway fund from the German bank, where it had been deposited by Lenin in 1922. Stalin then spent it lavishly on foreign propaganda for world revolution.

Second Fund Bolsters Stalin.

Some of his not so friendly associates now hint that he bought personal popularity with it by creating fat jobs for his supporters, so the fact that this new getaway fund is accompanied by an equal amount of propaganda work seems to substantiate this. Last month, when I obtained this information in Moscow, I was told that Stalin would not permit the creation of the $100,000,000 getaway insurance unless another $100,000,000 fund was set aside for propaganda work. Stalin knows this will help to keep him in power.

According to information it has been decided to concentrate these two secret funds in Germany and England. There will not be any deposited in America for two reasons. First, because the Kremlin gang is not sure enough of their American connections to feel safe about hiding money in American banks, and, second, because the United States is too far away for safe landing in case they are obliged to leave Russia quickly.

Nevertheless, half of all the soviet government's profits derived from trade with America will go eventually into the new secret funds. All soviet trade money accumulated in the United States will be transferred to London, where the secret cut will be made.

Apart from their difficulty in persuading Stalin to indorse the getaway fund, Voroshilov, Koganovitch, and Molotov and other cautious commissare are not putting over the scheme without considerable opposition inside the highest council in Moscow. Their toughest adversary is Krijanovsky—the head of the state planning commission—who is held technically responsible for the success or failure of Russia's pet "five year plan."

Krijanovsky says that he needs every nickel of soviet trade profits in order to put over the five year plan. So with his neck probably hanging in the balance—for administrative failure often means the firing squad in the land of the soviets—Krijanovsky now sees half of his working resources being sidetracked to safeguard other men's skins.

He doesn't like it. Nor do any of the other soviet trade agents at home or abroad.

STEWART-WARNER CO. ASSETS NOW ARE $13,979,512

ITALY INDORSES CREDIT OF RUSSIA FOR OIL SUPPLY

Plans to Break Grip on Fuel Imports.

BY DAVID DARRAH.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ROME, Aug. 16.—The Italian government's new trade agreement with Russia embraces a formidable plan to solve Italy's oil problem, and especially to break the virtual oil monopoly of Italy held by the Standard Oil company and English groups, according to further details of the scheme revealed here today.

The text of the trade agreement has not yet been published, but is understood to have involved the Italian state's guarantee of up to 75 per cent of the long term credits given Russia in return for purchases in Italy. The soviets are said to have bargained to buy $10,000,000 worth of goods in Italy the first year and $25,000,000 worth in subsequent years.

Trade Favors Russia.

At present the trade balance between the two countries is heavily against Italy, for while she buys coal, cereals and oil in Russia, Italian manufacturers have not been able to balance this with proportionate sales of manufactured products because of the soviet demand for long credits.

Under the new trade scheme, concentration is to be made on oil purchases in Russia, the Italians aiming to throw the business which formerly went to Anglo-Saxon groups to the soviets. This is to be carried out through a state promoted Italian organization known as "General Italian Petroleum Enterprise," which was organized four years ago to develop every activity related to the oil industry in Italy.

This company during the last two years has sunk 20 oil wells in Italy and Albania, but without great results. Some time ago, however, the "Agip," as it is called, in order to throw off competition and break the Anglo-Saxon monopoly in Italy, made a long term contract with the soviet oil organization with the idea of storing up large supplies and being thus able to control oil prices in a measure.

Sells Third of All Oil.

Agip now imports 30 per cent of the oil imported into Italy and 34 per cent of all oil products are sold through it, the other 66 per cent being sold by English and American companies and their subsidiary Italian organized companies.

It is said that the purpose of the Mussolini government, stung by the recent American high tariff wall, is to develop Agip with further vigor through soviet trade pacts. Agip already has a small oil fleet, and five great magazine tanks for oil storage have been built which represent 15 per cent of all oil stored in Italy. Agip recently absorbed the National Mineral Oil society and mineral oil refinery in Fiume.

OIL CO. RETURNS.

E. B. Reeser, president of the American Petroleum institute, said the average yearly return on the aggregate net worth of 31 principal oil companies for the 13 year period from 1913 to 1925 was 11.5 per cent, and the weighted average, taking into account the increase in net worth year by year, was only 9.9 per cent.

Prosecuting Stock Swindlers.

Massachusetts has begun a concentrated campaign for state-wide prosecution of stock swindlers that will be watched with a great deal of interest.

After a recent conference of state authorities Attorney General Joseph E. Warner announced that his office, district attorneys throughout the state, and the detective division of the state police had agreed to coöperate to the fullest extent in a concerted drive against fraud, which he estimates costs the commonwealth $50,000,000 annually.

The statutes protecting the public against fraud vary in different states and the methods by which the laws are enforced likewise differ.

As long as there are people who will buy securities without first properly investigating them and the dealer who offers them there will be fraud. The law cannot prevent swindling entirely. But it can do a great deal.

Protective associations have long urged closer coöperation between the various law enforcing agencies as a means toward elimination of fraud.

Wherever there are two or more different sets of enforcing agencies working separately experience has shown that there is likely to be buck passing. The swindler treads his way carefully between them and too frequently manages to elude all of them.

Massachusetts proposes to combine the efforts of the investigating and prosecuting agencies with those of the police. The execution of such a program should materially reduce the state's $50,000,000 annual contribution to crooks.

If this campaign is successful Massachusetts' swindlers will move to a new location where the climate is more healthful.

In many states no legal action is brought against a bucket shop or fraudulent promotion until some customer discovers his error and signs a complaint. By that time many innocent victims have been mulcted of their savings. Then one of two things may happen. The promoter may get wind of the trouble ahead and quietly depart, or he may offer to settle with the complainant by returning his money. In that case the complaint is usually withdrawn and the dealer continues to operate.

Another thing that makes the apprehension and conviction of stock swindlers difficult is the fact that many of them do not operate in the state in which their headquarters are located. Wary of the postal laws, they conduct their interstate trade over the telephone. As a result investors in one state may suffer because of lax enforcement of securities laws in another state.

Says Trade in 9th District Off Sharply

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—The volume of business in the ninth federal reserve district in July decreased sharply both from the level of June and from the levels of July in other recent years, says federal reserve bank of Minneapolis in its monthly survey. The decline reflected the effect of the excessively hot weather which has not been equalled in recent years and which was disastrous for the grain crops in certain parts of the district. The bank continues:

"The index of debts to individual accounts in seventeen cities after adjustment for seasonal variations was 99 in July, as compared with 111 in June and 134 in July a year ago. The country check clearings index was 94 in July, as compared with 107 in June and 125 in July last year. A portion of the decrease as compared with a year ago was due to the abnormally large volume of grain moving last year.

Total freight car loadings during the four weeks ending July 26 were 19 per cent smaller than a year ago. All commodity groups showed decreases except coal and coke, which showed 7 per cent increase. Decreases, as compared with a year ago, occurred in department store sales, electric power consumption, number of building permits issued, grain, cattle and hog marketings, iron ore, and flour and linseed product shipments. There was a small increase in the value of building permits issued and in the number of sheep marketed.

"Farm income from cash grains, dairy products and hogs marketed during July was less than two-thirds of the income from these products marketed in July last year. The decrease was due to tremendous decline in the volume of grain marketed as well as lower prices.

News and Gossip of Stock Marts

Expect Exchange Offer.

Recent activity and strength of American Light and Traction have given rise to reports that an exchange offer may soon be made by United Light and Power of its A stock for American Light on a favorable basis to the latter's stockholders. The two companies already have close connections, with United Light understood to have substantial holdings of American Light.

Vacuum Depression.

Weakness in Vacuum is understood to have resulted from causes other than the earnings showing of the company during the latest quarter. In some quarters depression in the stock has been attributed to the delay in the actual consummation of the Vacuum-Standard Oil of New York consolidation, due to the federal government suit. In addition the general bad business conditions in Australia, where Vacuum does a large volume, and also in New Zealand, where there has been talk of arranging a British oil monopoly, have had a depressing effect on some holders of Vacuum.

Radio Disappoints.

Six months results for the Radio corporation were a little more disappointing to the market than had been anticipated, according to explanations of yesterday's decline in the stock. The failure to earn the full senior preferred dividend was due to a $7,700,000 shrinkage in total income, while expenses, reserves, taxes, and other charges declined only $3,200,000. An operating profit was achieved despite this condition, due to liquidation of heavy inventories accumulated for the winter trade which remained unsold as a result of the stock crash.

Deserts Bears.

The abatement of the drought has left the bears without a timely selling argument, brokers declared yesterday. With a seasonal upturn in business in the offing, the bears now have little in the news developments to talk about, it was said. One of the mysteries of Wall street has been the disappearance of the tariff argument as a reason for lower security prices. the drought scare now seems well on its way to join the tariff scare in the resting place of forgotten bearish arguments, optimistic brokers declared yesterday.

U. S. POLICIES IN LATIN AMERICA, INSTITUTE TOPIC

Opinions Expressed Vary Widely.

Williamstown, Mass., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Widely varying views on the economic and financial aspects of American intervention in the Caribbean area were expressed at the Institute of Politics today. American intervention in Latin America was justified on the ground both of practicality and idealism. On the other hand, intervention was criticized because it was seen as a means of increasing the economic dependence of the Latin-American republics on the United States.

Denial that Wall street had stimulated intervention by this nation in the affairs of the Caribbean nations was coupled with the prediction that just as small banks seek the protection of larger institutions with which to merge and consolidate, so would Haiti, Santo Domingo, and the other Caribbean nations seek the protection of the United States.

Hoover Policy in Dispute.

It was argued that in the modern world there was no room for the artificial lines which break up Central America into five small, weak states.

President Hoover's policy, defined as "giving governmental support to economic intervention rather than to economic imperialism" was characterized as a group of "audacious principles" which were regarded with alarm by other nations who feared that "big business" would be allowed to dominate American international policies.

The assertion that most of the inhabitants of nations "which have enjoyed the benefits of intervention" would favor its continuance was vigorously disputed.

Speakers on Subject.

The speakers at the general conference which was under the direction of Henry Kittredge Norton, were W. W. Cumberland, former financial adviser to Haiti; William English Walling, publicist and editor of the foreign affairs section of the Democratic campaign book of 1928; Robert L. Boomer of E. H. Rollins & Sons, bankers, New York, and Herbert F. Forver, professor of economics at the University of Cincinnati.

Mr. Walling, who presented the Latin-American viewpoint, asserted that what the Caribbean nations feared most was American control of their banking systems "just as we control the Cuban banking system."

JOINT STOCK LAND BANKS' LOANS STEADY

Outstanding farm mortgage loans of all the federal and joint stock land banks on June 30 totaled $1,801,144,355, while the twelve intermediate credit banks, which deal largely with coöperative marketing organizations, on the same date had $91,665,342 outstanding in loans and discounts.

Federal farm loan board officials said these figures, carried in the board's quarterly report, showed little material change from the same date last year, and did not reflect any conditions brought about by the drought.

Assets and liabilities of the entire farm loan system were reported as $2,118,775,187.

Of the mortgage loans of the land banks, $1,192,719,717 were held by the federal land banks and the remainder by the twelve joint stock land banks.

The report showed only a small percentage of the land banks' assets was tied up in real estate, the carrying value of it being only 1.4 per cent of the total assets. Reserves set up against this further reduced the percentage to nine-tenths of 1 per cent.

NASH ASSERTS ELECTRIC RATES ARE CONSISTENT

Not Discriminatory, Is His Conclusion.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Aug. 16.—The logical conclusion from electric light and power rate data and discussion is that existing rates for different classes of service are not inconsistent nor discriminatory, according to L. R. Nash of the Stone and Webster service corporation.

"The basic policy under which the electric power business is carried on, subject to regulatory restrictions does not differ substantially from that found in other enterprises, although this consistency is not always understood, Mr. Nash says.

"A survey of the electric power industry leads to the conclusion that it is not seeking maximum present profits but that it is making substantial sacrifices through comparatively unprofitable rates to build up a volume of business which may become profitable in the future. The reductions in rates which have been made and are being made clearly embody this intent."

Illustrates Trend.

As an illustration of this downward trend Mr. Nash says that average residence rates per unit in the United States show a decline from 14.4 cents in 1900 to 8.7 cents in 1913; 8.0 cents in 1920; 6.80 cents in 1927, and to 6.55 cents in 1928. The estimated average for 1929 is 6.20 cents. Commercial and industrial rates have shown less consistent trends because of the greater effect on them of fluctuations in fuel, investment, and other cost.

Taking up criticism which has been aimed at the relative rates charged for different classes of electric service, Mr. Nash says that in 1928 the following consumption and rates applied to average customers for different classes of service:

	Av. for U. S. A., 1928. KWH Per Month	Rate Per KWH.
Industrial	6,400	1.44 cents
Commercial	275	4.55 cents
Residential	38	6.55 cents

Wholesale Rates.

Industrial service, including wholesale power and power sold for railroad electrification, amounted to about two-thirds of the entire sales of the industry to ultimate consumers; commercial service, including lighting and small power, required about one-sixth of the total sales, and residential service, including domestic use and some farm service, amounted to about one-eighth of the total.

ANOTHER GROUP OF HIGHS SET IN BOND MARKET

New York, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Railroad bonds further profited today from a steady inquiry which has been a feature of trading this week on the New York Stock exchange. Another group of new 1930 highs were registered by carrier obligations, including several market leaders.

Trading was rather quiet during the half day session, with a firm trend maintained. Utilities did no more than hold their gains of previous days of the week. The meager sales of foreign dollar bonds were mostly at a small premium over the previous day's final figures. United States governments were inactive and steady.

The demand for carrier obligations was strong. The day's crop of new highs included such active issues as Union Pacific first 4s, Pennsylvania debenture 4½s, Southern Pacific warrant 4½s, Chesapeake and Ohio general 4½s and refunding 4½s, Cleveland Union Terminal 4½s, Big Four 4½s, and several less active issues such as Missouri, Kansas and Texas 4½s, Morris and Essex 5s and 4½s, Norfolk and Western 4s, Central Pacific Shore Line 4s, Atchison 4½s, and Reading 4½s.

Best gains in the utility group were made by New Orleans Public Service 5s and Public Service Electric and Gas 4½s, the latter reaching a new year's peak. General Cable 5½s were weak. American Telephone issues were active and firm. General Steel Casting 5½s and Philadelphia company 5s were in demand. Francisco Sugar 7½s sagged 2 points to a new low. Stock privilege issues were dull and narrowly irregular. Dodge Brothers convertible 6s soared 1¼ points. Railroad convertibles were firm.

DRY GOODS.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—(AP)—Cotton goods were quiet and weak today. Wide sheetings have been reduced to a basis of 50 cents for 10-4 bleached, a decline of 5 cents a yard. Southern mills and others engaged on print cloths or sheetings will curtail production three weeks in September and three weeks in October, and will continue alternate week operations, thereafter, regularly. Trade was quieter at the week-end in women's coats for fall. Fine combed goods sold moderately during the week. Burlap prices were unchanged. No change was reported in raw silk and the market for the day was dull.

LIVERPOOL COTTON.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 16.—(AP)—COTTON—Spot quiet, prices lower. American strict good middling, 7.65d; good middling, 7.30d; strict middling, 7.00d; middling, 6.80d; strict low middling, 6.50d; low middling, 5.95d; strict good ordinary, 5.25d; good ordinary 4.85d. FIND ACTIVITY IN NEW "SUB" AMONG DUNES

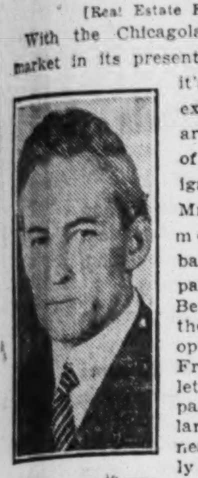
Beverly Shores Has 1,800 Acres of Beauty.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

With the Chicagoland subdivision market in its present peaceful state it's an inspiriting experience to slip around the bend of old Lake Michigan on one of Mr. Insull's fast moving interurban trains and pay a visit to Beverly Shores, the Indiana development of the Frederick H. Bartlett Realty company. There's no languor or sleepiness there. Beverly Shores is a subdivision both wide awake and beautiful; perhaps destined to be one of the most lovely in Chicagoland when it reaches its maturity.



ROBERT BARTLETT
[Kallenback Photo.]

Here, 51 miles from Randolph street, is an 1,800 acre tract of typical Hoosier sand dune country, with gorgeous sandy hills along an equally gorgeous stretch of sand beach. While Beverly Shores eventually will cover 1,800 acres, the Bartlett organization, according to Robert Bartlett, vice president and general manager, owns a total of 3,500 acres between Michigan City on the east and the 2,000 acre Indiana Dunes state park on the west. It has a frontage of beach on Lake Michigan of 5½ miles.

Of this total of 3,500 acres approximately 1,700 acres comprise Bartlett's "Lake Shore" development, adjoining Michigan City. This subdivision was opened two years ago and was sold out in record breaking time.

27 Miles of Winding Roads.

The completion of necessary engineering work in the 1,800 acres of Beverly Shores has taken a little less than a year. Now there are more than 27 miles of curved concrete and graveled roads, winding in and about the countless sand dunes. Homes are springing up all over the subdivision and they are permanent, all year round houses, not merely summer cottages.

Perhaps one of the most ambitious is a $40,000 residence erected by a Gary man. Although not the most expensive, but we believe the most attractive both in architecture, layout, and setting, is the house erected on top of a sand dune, with picturesque vistas of lake waters through trees, by Le Roy J. Keneval, treasurer and general sales manager, of the Bartlett organization.

This beautifully situated residence was built by Mr. Keneval for his mother, Mrs. Bessie R. Keneval. He spends as much of his time there as he can spare. His Chicago home is at the South Shore Country club.

On the Dunes Highway.

Beverly Shores has an attractive Spanish type station on the Chicago, South Shore and South Bend interurban line. Broadway, a wide concrete thoroughfare running north and south, extends from the eighteen hole golf course, a short distance south of the station and also the Dunes highway, directly north to the lake shore.

At the north end of Broadway is a large parking plaza of concrete, below which is a public bathing beach dedicated to the community by the Bartlett firm. Provision also is being made for several street end beaches at other points along the lake front drive, a new concrete highway skirting the entire shore line.

In addition the firm has made provision for a park back a short distance from the lake. It also has a small "model farm" where it is growing vegetables in order to show prospective tenants what can be done to keep the kitchen table supplied. This tiny farm is on a bit of lowland which formerly was marshy and has been drained. The result is ground almost as fertile as that found in Florida's drained Everglades. Cabbages are grown here that would surely win a prize for size at any county fair.

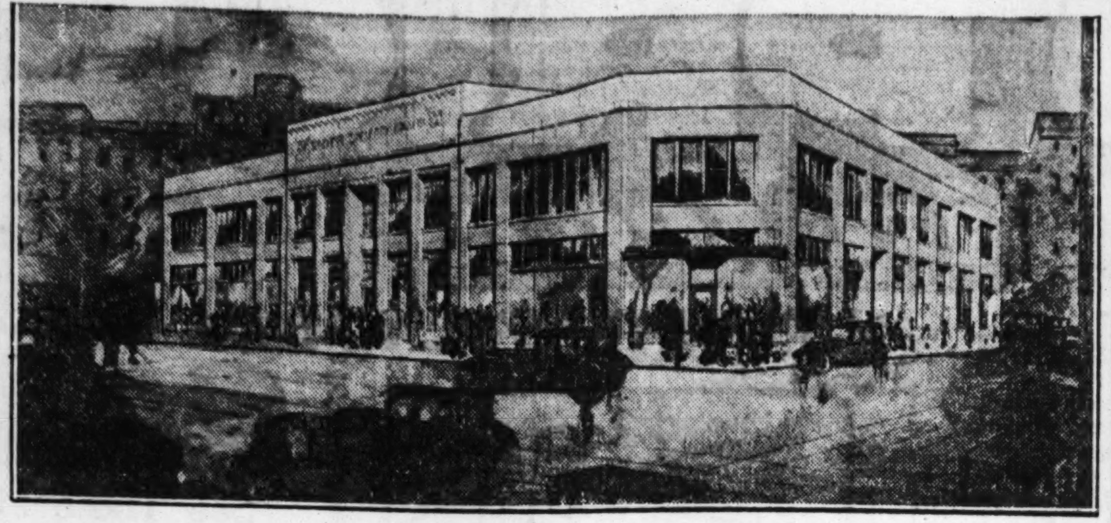
Makes Run in 75 Minutes.

We've mentioned both the station and the golf course but haven't given any details about train service or the grounds. It is stated that more than $120,000 has been spent already on the golf course. It's to be a public fee course and already has an attractive clubhouse.

The interurban trains make the run from Randolph street to Beverly Shores in seventy-five minutes and with hourly service all day long. A cutoff west of Gary is scheduled to reduce the running time from the loop to Beverly Shores considerably when it's put into operation.

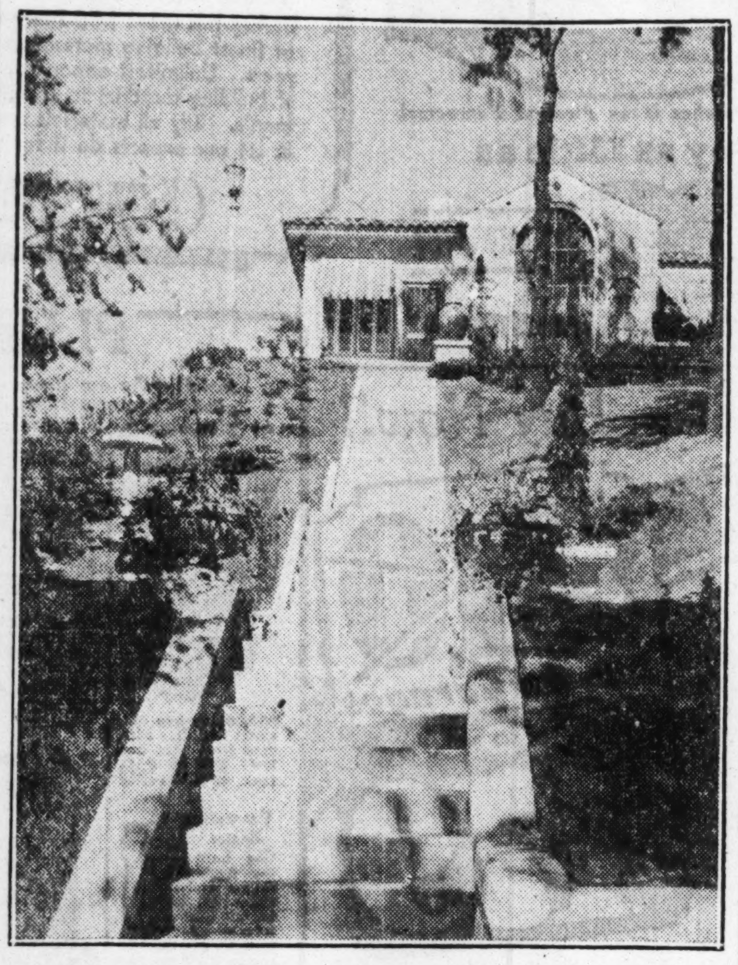
Unquestionably the time will come when planes will fly across the end of Lake Michigan, making the thirty-one miles from Beverly Shores to Grant park in an unbelievably short time. Motor boats also probably will be used for transportation.

A REJUVENATED BANK BUILDING



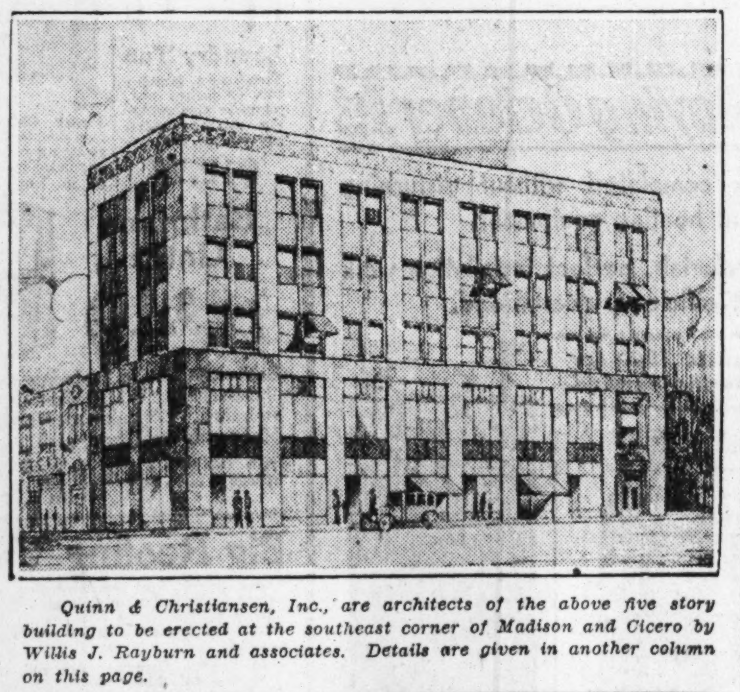
Above is how the Second Security bank, at the intersection of Western, Armitage and Milwaukee avenues, will look when its remodeling is completed from plans by Zimmerman, Saxe & Zimmerman. All exterior walls will be of Bedford stone, windows will be of plate glass, and the triangular building will have stores at each of its three corners. L. B. Sugarman made this perspective.

ATOP A HOOSIER SAND DUNE



Frederick Mertz is architect of the above residence erected by Le Roy J. Keneval for his mother, Mrs. Bessie R. Keneval, atop a sand dune, overlooking Lake Michigan at Beverly Shores, Ind. Mr. Keneval is treasurer and general manager of the Frederick H. Bartlett Realty company, developers of this subdivision.

AT MADISON AND CICERO



Quinn & Christiansen, Inc., are architects of the above five story building to be erected at the southeast corner of Madison and Cicero by Willis J. Rayburn and associates. Details are given in another column on this page.

WILL REMODEL BUILDING OF THE SECURITY BANK

Work will start within a few days on a complete remodeling of the triangular building bounded by Western, Armitage, and Milwaukee avenues, occupied by the Second Security bank. The building will be constructed in units, so that the bank may maintain its quarters without leaving the building. It will occupy the center of the remodeled structure when completed. There'll be stores at each of the three corners.

Zimmerman, Saxe & Zimmerman have designed a structure which will have all its exterior walls entirely of Bedford stone. Seventeen and a half feet will be cut off the present structure to permit the widening of Western avenue. Completion is set for next February. The cost is placed at approximately $150,000.

PLAN 5 STORY BUILDING FOR MADISON-CICERO

To Have Stores, Shops and Offices.

Willis J. Rayburn and associates announced yesterday that they will demolish the present structure at the southeast corner of Madison street and Cicero avenue and will erect a five story shops and office building. Plans are now being prepared by Quinn & Christiansen, Inc., architects.

This is the first extensive building project to be undertaken in this area since the board of education property nearby was put on the market several months ago.

The site fronts 165 feet on Cicero avenue and has a frontage on West Madison street of forty-eight feet.

The facing of the two lower stories will be of black granite, with both the Madison and Cicero elevations of Indiana limestone on the upper floors. The offices will be reached by a two story lobby with high speed elevators.

Willis J. Rayburn and associates, whose offices are in the First National Bank building, are holders of a ninety-nine year lease on the property and are now negotiating leases on the shops and offices. Completion date is set for April 1, 1931.

The Madison Square theater, across the street from the new building at 4740 West Madison strete, has been taken over from Balaban & Katz by the Essaness Theater corporation and will be reopened on Aug. 29th as the Byrd theater.

REALTORS FORM BODY TO HELP RELIEVE TAXES

Haylett Is Executive Secretary.

Newton C. Farr, president of the Chicago Real Estate board, announced last night that a new body, to be known as the property owners' division of the Chicago Real Estate board, had been formed, having for its central objective relief from excessive taxation by a more equitable distribution of the burden. H. H. Haylett, formerly executive vice president of the greater south side chamber of commerce, is its executive secretary.

H. H. HAYLETT.
[Tribune Photo.]

The new division will work in harmony with the Real Estate Taxpayers' association of Illinois, with which it has an interlocking directorate. Members of the property owners' division of the realty board also automatically will be members of the property owners' division of the Illinois Association of Real Estate Boards and of the similar division of the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Calls Affiliation Valuable.

"Local improvement associations," Mr. Farr said, "have been able to do a great deal for property owners in particular sections and for the development of the communities in which they function; but until now there has been no opportunity for a city-wide, state-wide, and nation-wide organization of property owners. The affiliation with real estate boards experienced in working for and influential in achieving results in the interest of property owners will be valuable."

The National Association of Real Estate Boards, in coöperation with three other business associations, has sponsored an extensive study of methods of modernizing the taxation systems that would relieve real estate from the present unfair burdens. This study will enlist the services of the tax experts from various sections of the country, under the direction of Prof. Simeon D. Leland of the University of Chicago.

Three Bodies Functioning.

The Chicago Real Estate board and the Association of Real Estate Taxpayers of Illinois have urged before the legislature the adoption of the proposed amendment to the constitution to remove the limitation of uniformity which has resulted in real estate bearing over three-quarters of the tax burden in Illinois.

Three property owners' organizations in Illinois are functioning and twenty others are in the process of organization to support this amendment, to work for such substitute tax measures as will be found most fair and most effective in furnishing relief to real estate, to demand further improvement of the assessment system, and to take such other steps as may be needed for tax relief.

Visit Downstate Cities.

The boards which have divisions are in Oak Park, Evanston, and Harvey. Those in the process of formation are in Aurora, Berwyn-Cicero, Bloomington, Blue Island, Bureau county, Champaign-Urbana, Chicago, Chicago Heights, Danville, Du Page county, Elgin, Hoopeston, Joliet, Kankakee, Libertyville-Mundelein, McHenry county, North Shore, Peoria, Rockford, and Waukegan-North Chicago.

During the last week Ralph V. Field, the executive secretary of the Illinois Association of Real Estate Boards, and John W. Gorby, a field secretary, have visited Princeton, Peoria, Bloomington, Champaign-Urbana, Danville, Hoopeston, and Kankakee in the interest of property owners' divisions.

The executive committee of the property owners' division of the board is headed by B. F. Lindheimer and is composed of Richard M. O'Brien, Albert W. Swayne, Cornelius Teninga, Barnet Hodes, James E. Bistor, Newton C. Farr, Mark Levy, Charles E. Fox, William B. Frankenstein, Henry E. Hedberg, Jacob L. Kesner, and Edward M. Bertha.

HOME BUILDING AND REMODELING

OLD RESIDENCE IS REMODELED; LOOKS LIKE NEW

Colonial Entrance Gives Pleasant Effect.

(Send stamped, addressed envelope to Louise Bargelt, Homebuilders' Editor, The Tribune, for booklets, "Choosing the Home Site" and "101 Ways of Remodeling the Home.")

BY LOUISE BARGELT.
[Home Builders Editor.]

Those people who are living in rapidly maturing homes, dwellings which scarcely stand up in comparison with the newer structures around them, will find of interest the vivid remodeling story told by this home in Park Ridge, Ill. Architect for the remodeling, William F. McChaughey, 222 West Adams street, Chicago.

LOUISE BARGELT.
[Hutchinson Photo.]

As it stood before its modernizing, it was a two story frame house, obviously quite old. A substantial structure, however, occupying a valuable corner lot, distinctly worth the remodeling from a financial as well as an esthetic point of view.

The following are a few of the major changes wrought in the program of modernization. The cost was approximately around $6,000.

The house was given a brick veneer of colonial tapestry and increased insulation. It is needless to mention the added fire safety, the added sturdiness and value afforded by this new brick overcoat.

A new roof of green variegated shingles semi-thatched was added, and all new sash installed throughout the house.

Then came the question of the entrance. The old one bespoke the style of years ago, and inasmuch as the entrance of the home is vitally important it was decided to give the house a decided change. We see a colonial front entrance and terrace, inviting and hospitable, as such colonial entrances always are. Tall pillars reach to the second story open porch

Inside the seven room home was given new tile bath and lavatory, new oak floors, an arch in the dining room and effective Colonial stairs to the second floor. The walls were freshly decorated and the kitchen transformed by new cabinets, sink, mechanical refrigeration and floor into a highly efficient and up to the minute workroom. A double garage, harmonizing with the home exterior was built.

The wisdom of employing an architect in a piece of modernizing like this cannot be over emphasized.

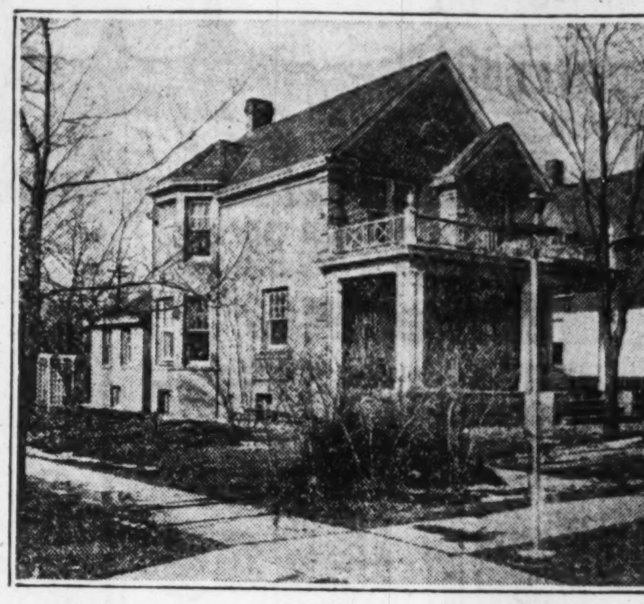
Of course it is foolish to attempt what the domestic budget cannot possibly stand. Such a performance entails too much worry and big worries can kill faster than most germs, or if they don't kill they can make life distinctly not worth the living.

But there are many people who can easily afford to bring their old homes up to date in every sense of the word, and yet who are held back by indecision, uncertainty and an irritating sense of not being "able to decide just what to do!"

These people don't want to sell; they are convinced the old house is far too good to tear down and that there is no reason in the world to build an entirely new home. The old construction is sound and the interior arrangements, with perhaps a few minor structural changes, are satisfactory.

There is only one satisfactory way of solving this problem. That is to call in the services of a good architect or a builder and improve the value and appearance of one's place by intelligent and conservative remodeling.

PARK RIDGE RESIDENCE



A home in Park Ridge, Ill., as it appeared after it was given a brick veneer of buff colonial tapestry, a new roof of green variegated wood shingles, semi-thatched, a new Colonial entrance and terrace, increased insulation, and considerable interior modernizing. Architect for remodeling, William F. McCaughey, 222 West Adams street, Chicago.

Answers to Questions on Home Owning

On Oak Flooring.

Dear Mrs. Bargelt: Can we use the ⅜ inch oak floors after we have taken out our old ones? What kind of oak floors are best—the ⅜ inch or the standard one inch floor? MRS. G.

Ans.: You can use the ⅜ inch floor if you have a sub-floor in good condition. You will find this satisfactory although there is not a great deal of difference in price between this and the excellent standard one inch red oak flooring.

Origin of the Loggia.

Dear Mrs. Bargelt: To what type of house does the loggia belong? Is it possible to have a loggia with a rather simple country home? Where should it be placed? When did the loggia first originate? T. P.

Answer—The loggia is a representative feature of the Italian home. As a feature of the simple country home it can be used as sun parlor, porch or breakfast room. It seldoms projects beyond the main walls of the house but rather is recessed into the general fabric as an open air room. It is often placed at the principal corner of a house and thus commands a double view. It originates far back into antiquity. In Roman times it was definitely established in the atrium of the Roman villas at Pompeii. Later in Florence in medieval times it became established along the lines we know it today.

LIGHTED ENTRANCE NUMBER.

A few cents a month is all that it costs to maintain an electrically lighted entrance number seen from the street.

LUMINARIES OF THE LEGAL REALM TO GATHER IN CHICAGO—Among notables who will attend the annual meeting of the American Bar association, beginning Wednesday, are, left to right, Chief Justice Hughes of the United States Supreme court; Sir William Jowitt, British attorney general; George W. Wickersham, and Solicitor General Thomas D. Thacher.

VISUALIZING INTERESTING LETTERS—Natives make iron to dance and song in German East Africa's counterpart to Chicago's rolling mills, in the vicinity of Bukaba, Tanganyika territory, origin of today's interesting letter. Air is forced into the oven by goatskin bellows.

WHO WANTS TO BUY OR RENT A HOME THAT HAS

half-right bathrooms?

WHO INDEED! Popular ideals of every-day beauty and comfort have been going up fast in recent years. And the bathroom is one of the first places people examine . . . because its character and condition so closely concern the family's health and happiness . . . because its furnishings are, or should be, permanent . . . because this one room speaks volumes about the builder's judgment and about the tenant's taste and care.

Plumbing fixtures and fittings—in the kitchen, too—must be irreproachably right. A second-rate system is as embarrassing as a black eye, as troublesome as an aching tooth.

The newer and better apartments and houses recognize your need for perfect plumbing. Many of them use Kohler fixtures to achieve an advanced color harmony, blending the softer, clearer tones of Kohler enamel and vitreous china into a background of harmoniously tinted tile.

- Expect beauty in Kohler ware!

Kohler quality shows . . . in graceful forms and gleaming surfaces . . . in perfect fitness to purpose . . . in the studied decorative feeling of each detail. The enamel is fused smoothly to the metal underneath in an enduring bond. The vitreous china has a shining, lasting luster like that of your dinner dishes. An all-Kohler bathroom, carefully planned, matches the correctness of your most admired downstairs room.

New designs in Kohler metal fittings are clean-lined, smart, marvelously efficient. The faucets, drains, and other working parts are made of fine brass, using fewer and heavier separate pieces. The joints stay tight . . . action is silent, positive, fast . . . exposed surfaces are heavily plated with chromium, nickel or gold. Better materials and better designing add many years of usefulness.

- All-Kohler bathrooms are everlastingly right

Your plumbing system should be built to outlast your needs—to remove all worry about water supply and outlet. To this end, Kohler fixtures and fittings are made for lifetime service. You can count on their continued charm and convenience and safety.

And you will avoid needless expense for repairs. All-Kohler installations are a wise investment—costing no more at first, increasing property value and always saving money in the end. Many builders of large operations find the Kohler mark a proof of quality that home hunters know, notice and heed.

A visit to the nearest Kohler showroom will give you a wealth of new ideas on fixtures and fittings. Any one who plans to build or remodel should discuss this important subject with his architect and plumbing contractor. Meanwhile, write for Booklet H-8, which illustrates many attractive groupings and suggests modern ideas about home plumbing. . . . Kohler Co. Founded 1873. Kohler, Wisconsin. . . . ELEVEN IMPORTANT POINTS ABOUT PLUMBING

1 Kohler designs are decorative, purposeful, correct.
2 Kohler enamel is made by an exclusive formula, fused with an everlasting bond and keeps its smooth, glistening surface.
3 Vitreous china pieces are sculptured for beauty and service . . . thoroughly vitrified at high temperatures and armored with a smooth, lustrous, lasting glaze.
4 Kohler colors are soft, livable pastels . . . the white is a perfect white.
5 Kohler metal fittings are engineered for efficiency . . . heavily plated with chromium, nickel or gold. They match the fixtures in style, character and quality.
6 Materials are the finest—manufacture is most particular. All Kohler products show craftsmanship and care.
7 This company pioneered many of the big advances in plumbing. This year's Kohler products are next year's new ideas.
8 Kohler quality extends to the kitchen and laundry—for every plumbing need.
9 Kohler quality costs no more . . . and saves money later.
10 Kohler fixtures and fittings are handled and installed by qualified plumbers.
11 Back of the Kohler trade-mark are the traditions and spirit of an entire community . . . beautiful Kohler Village.

AMERICAN HEROES

LIGHT HORSE HARRY LEE, the most famous cavalry commander among Washington's Continentals. On the editorial page of today's Tribune, in the main news section, Clifford Raymond tells the fascinating story of his career.

A FIGHTING SON OF A FIGHTING FATHER—At a tender age John V. Clinnin Jr., son of General Clinnin, has taken up the manly art of self-defense. He is three years old, and he lives in Glencoe, and he believes he probably is the champion three year old of the north shore suburb.

40,000 CIVILIANS AND 10,000 SOLDIERS CREATE SPECTACLE AT CAMP GRANT—The scene at the tented city of the Illinois National Guard encampment when visitors and guardsmen heard Governor Emmerson's address to the division. With its Marvelous Flavor and Refreshing Vigor Comes an Arctic Coolness on a Summer Day

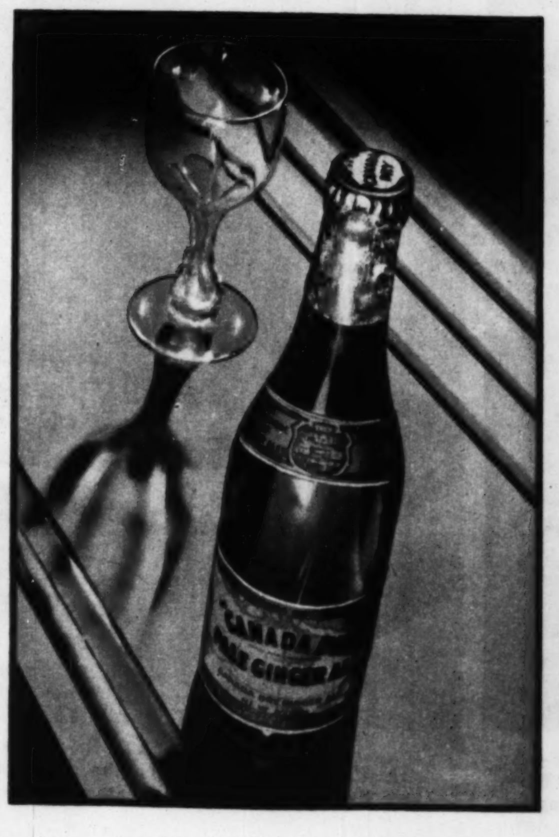
THE health of summer sun . . . the vigor of bodily activity . . . the stimulation which goes with clear eyes and sun-tanned faces . . . these are the quality of "Canada Dry." But with them, too, comes a cooling refreshment . . . a sense of physical comfort and well-being . . . a contentment which is likewise the quality of this fine old ginger ale.

The lean, lithe, active men and women of this country drink "Canada Dry." In it they find exhilaration. And in it they find the heritage of sport itself—basic excellence.

"Canada Dry" has it. Its very foundation is "Liquid Ginger"—which we make from selected Jamaica ginger root by a special process. This process is exclusively controlled by us and, unlike any other method, retains for "Canada Dry" all of the original aroma, flavor and natural essence of the ginger root. Rigid laboratory control assures uniformity, purity and highest quality. You will notice the difference.

In Paris . . . in London . . . in New York . . . it has won the approving nod of connoisseurs. In countless homes throughout this country and Canada it appears on dinner tables, is offered to friends, is served on any occasion. The Hostess Package of 12 bottles is a convenient way always to have it on hand in your home.



HAVE YOU TRIED—?

Canada Dry's new Golden Ginger Ale. Never before have you tasted a golden ginger ale with such a marvelous flavor. The secret of its delight comes from a secret and exclusive process of beverage making. Buy it where you buy "Canada Dry."

Canada Dry's new Sparkling Lime. This wonderfully refreshing beverage brings you the lure and romance of the tropics. Let it win you with its keen, cooling lime taste as it is winning countless others daily. Buy it where you buy "Canada Dry."

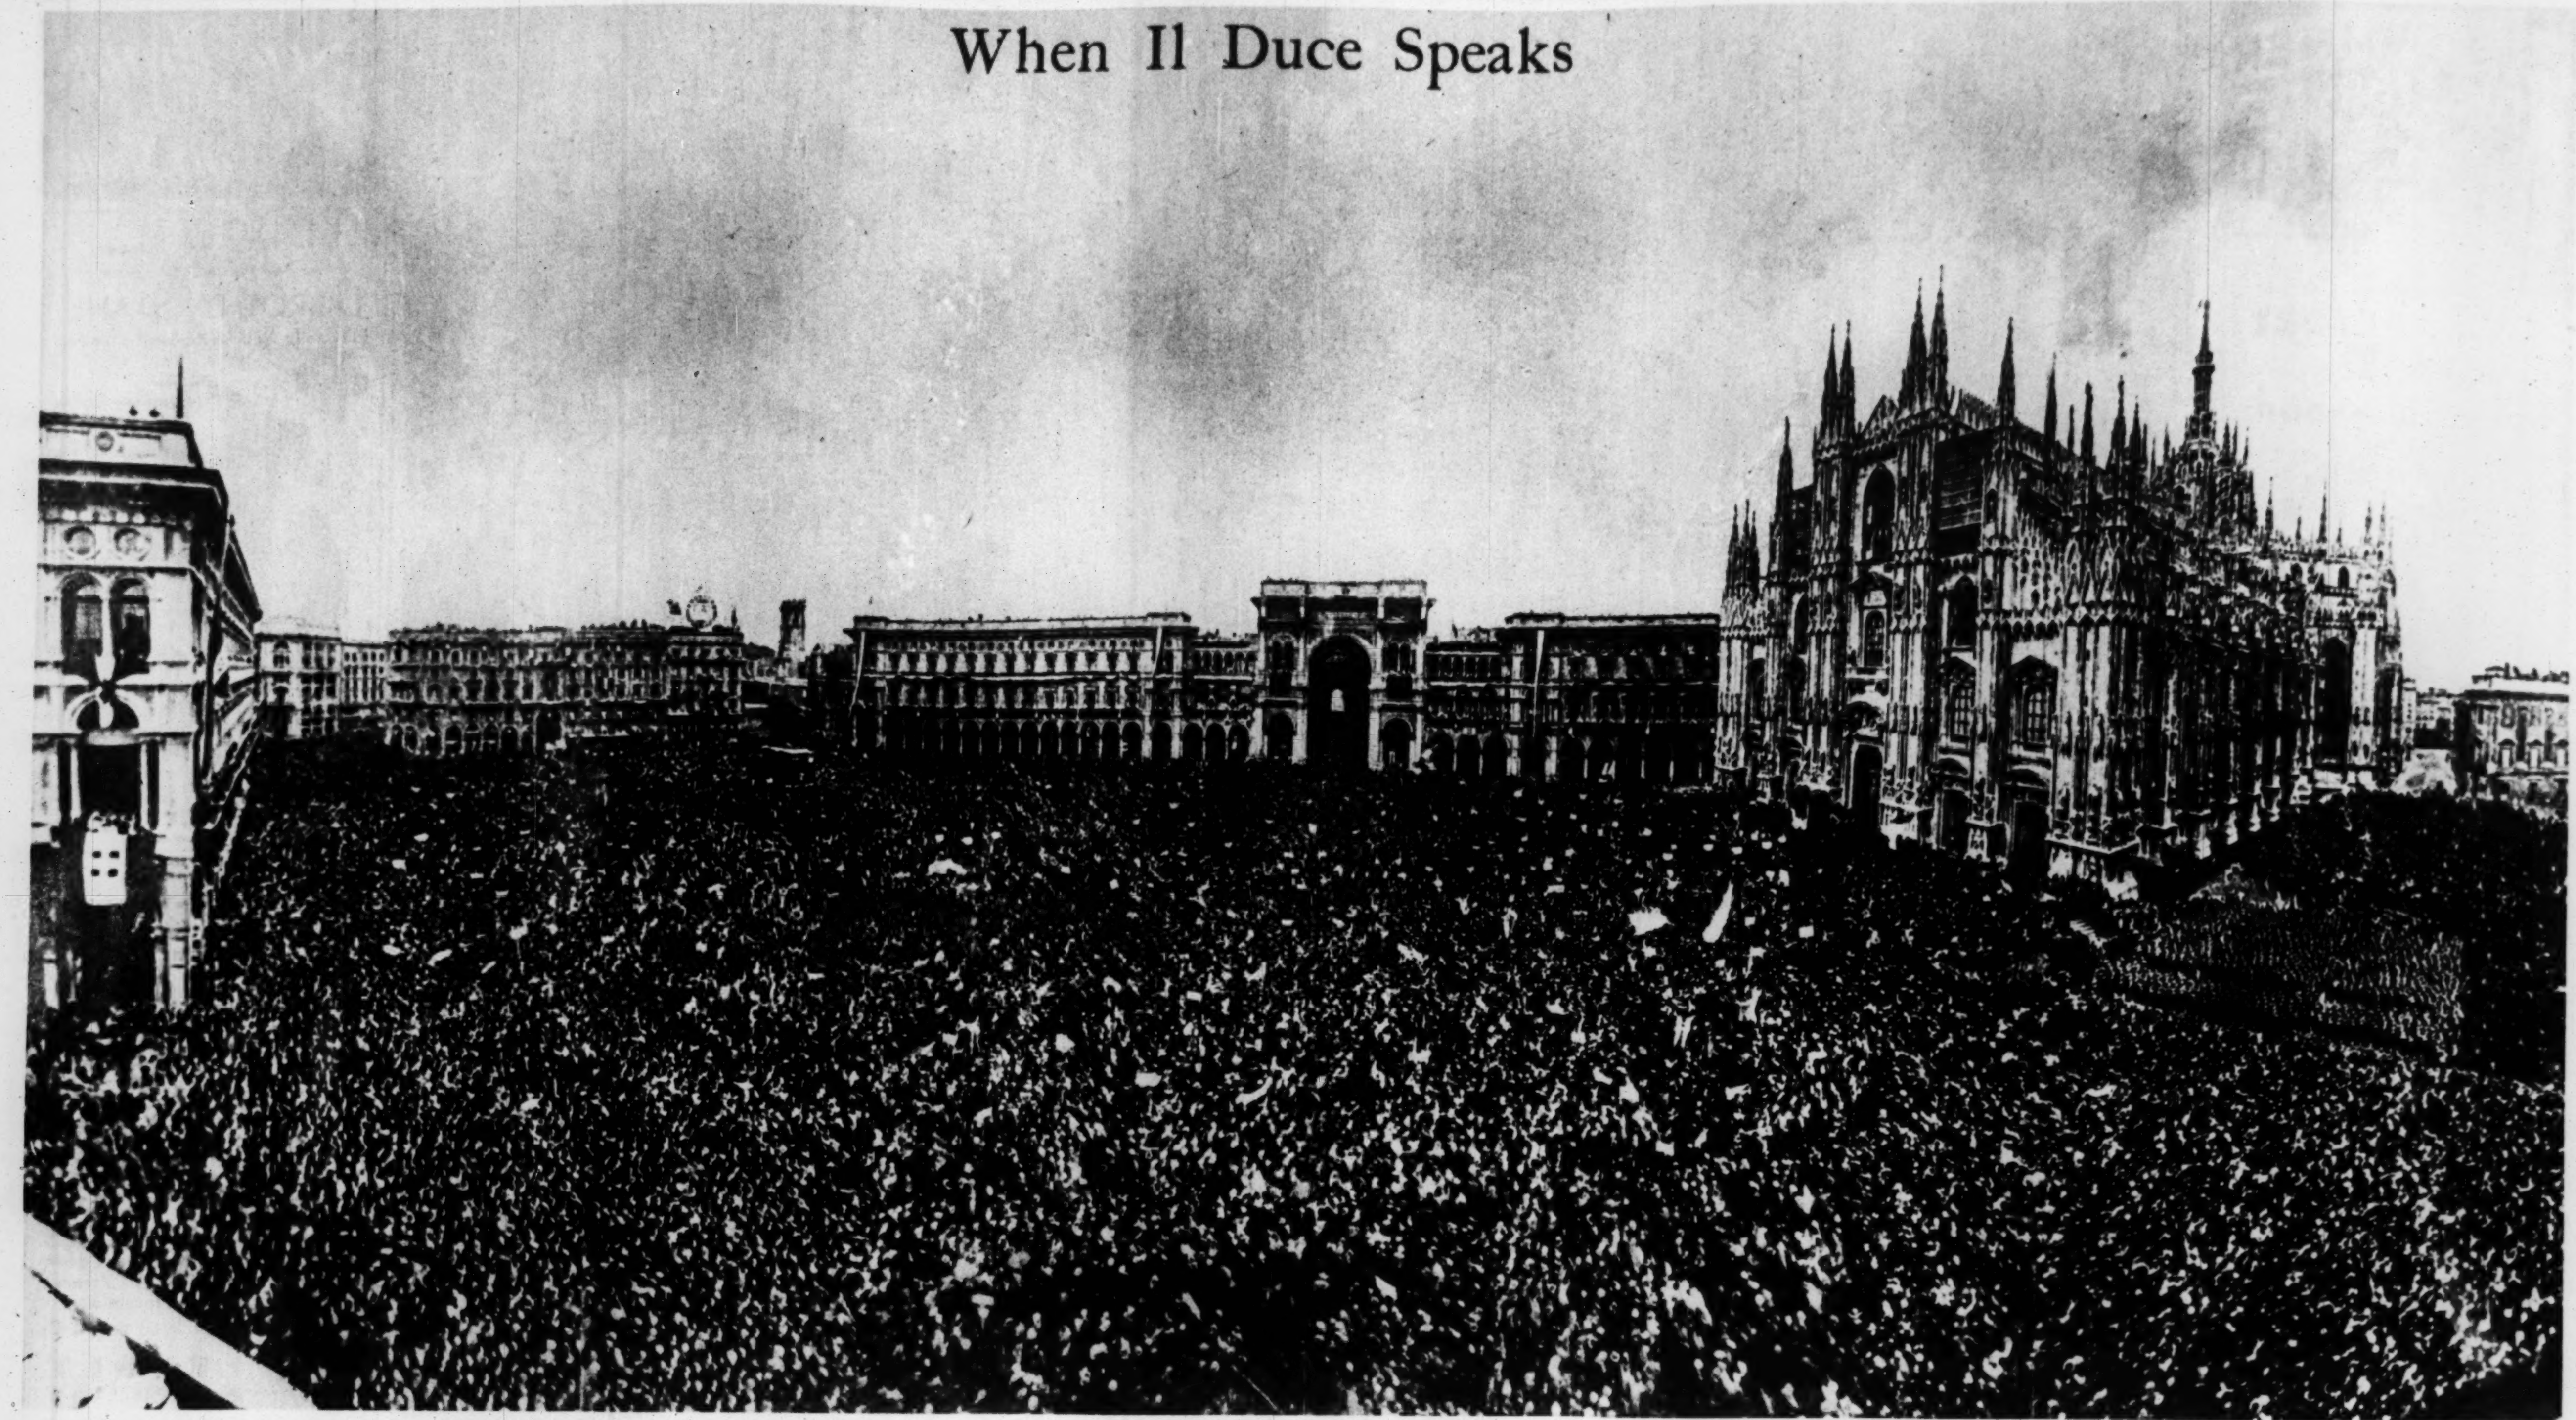
When Il Duce Speaks



ONE OF THE MOST STRIKING PHENOMENA OF THE AGE is the electrification of Italy by the masterful personality of the man of iron, the uncrowned king, Mussolini; perhaps nowhere outside Italy are witnessed such hosts as thunder acclaim at the appearances of the dictator, idolized symbol of Fascism's new day. SO MANY WOMEN MAKE THIS MISTAKE

A face powder may be good, but the true test must be your own skin

A face powder of any old texture won't do any longer. Women all over the land have learned from the leading beauty specialists that there are three types of skin--oily, dry and normal and that the powder for one texture type will not suit another. Plough has met this modern need with three face powders, each of different texture and each individually made to meet exactly the needs of those three skin types.

THE PLOUGH FACE POWDER FOR YOUR EXACT TYPE OF SKIN WILL GIVE YOU GREATEST BEAUTY

If your skin is oily, use heavy texture Plough's "Incense of Flowers" Face Powder in the oval box, 75c.

If your skin is dry, use light texture Plough's "Favorite Bouquet" in the square box, 50c.

If your skin is normal, use medium texture Plough's "Exquisite" in the round box, 50c.

Each of these Plough Powders come in five modern tints--white, flesh, pink, brunette, sun-tan. Plough's Three Face Powders are sensibly priced wherever beauty creations are sold.

If you are not certain as to exactly which Plough Face Powder gives the greatest beauty to your own skin, write Peggy Martin, Plough, Inc., Memphis, Tenn., specifying the tint you want and you will receive absolutely free generous test packages of the three different powders.

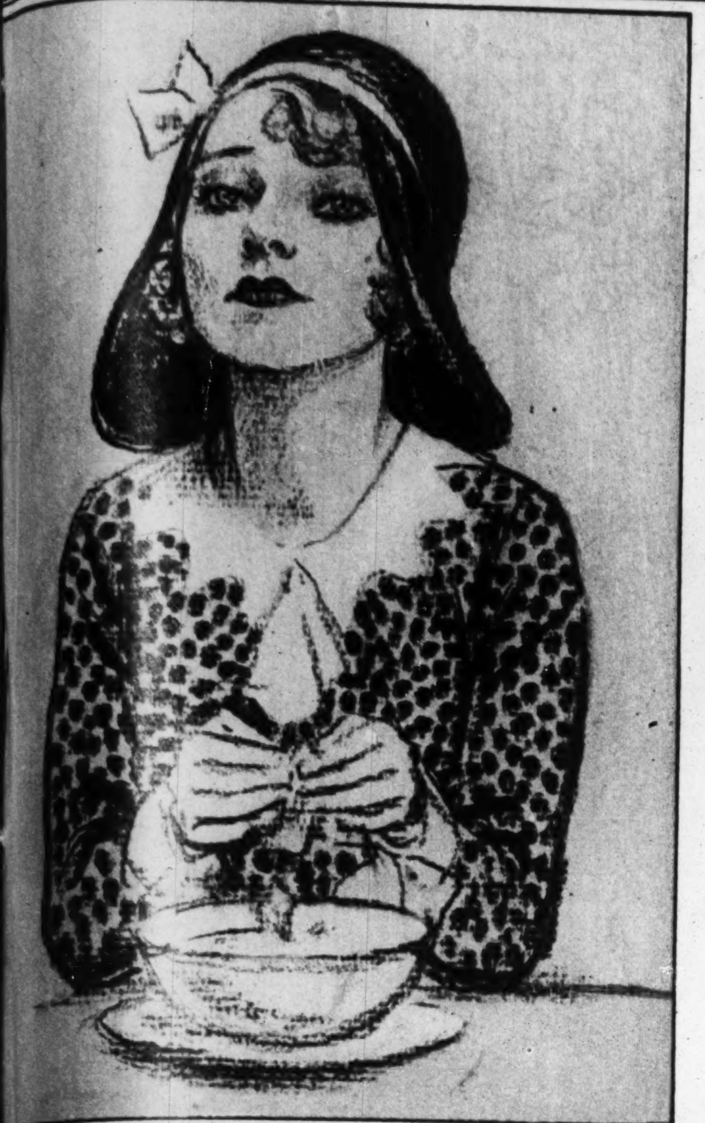
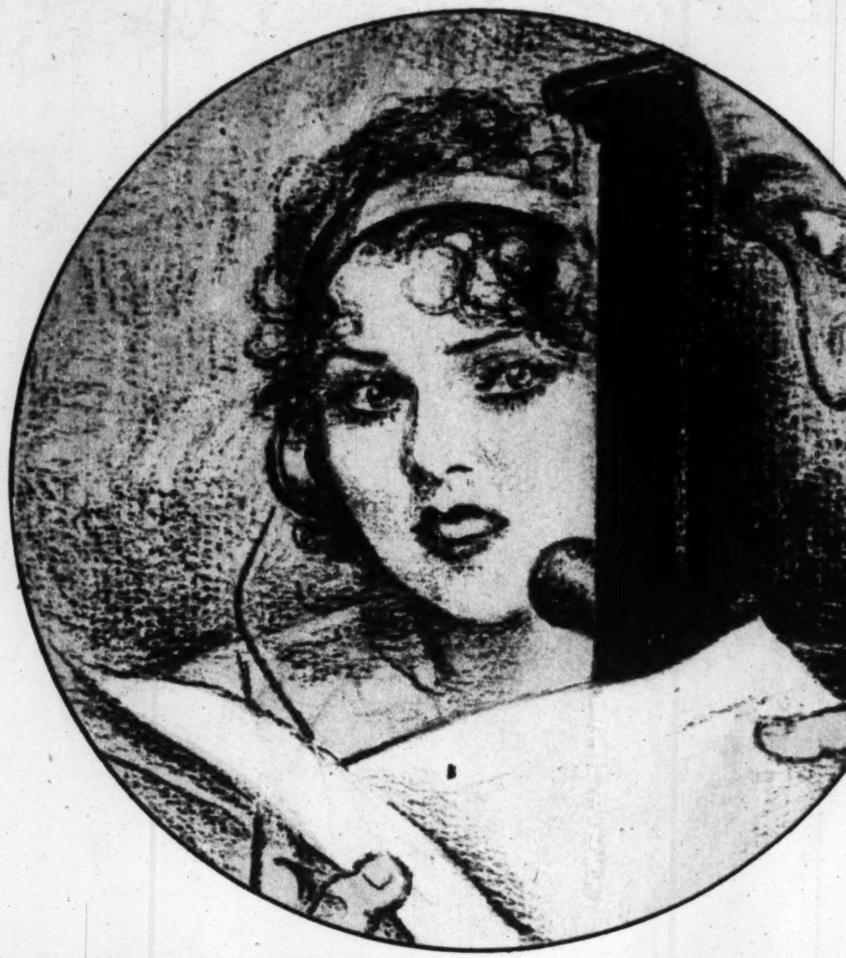
Temptations of a Working Girl

By W. E. Hill

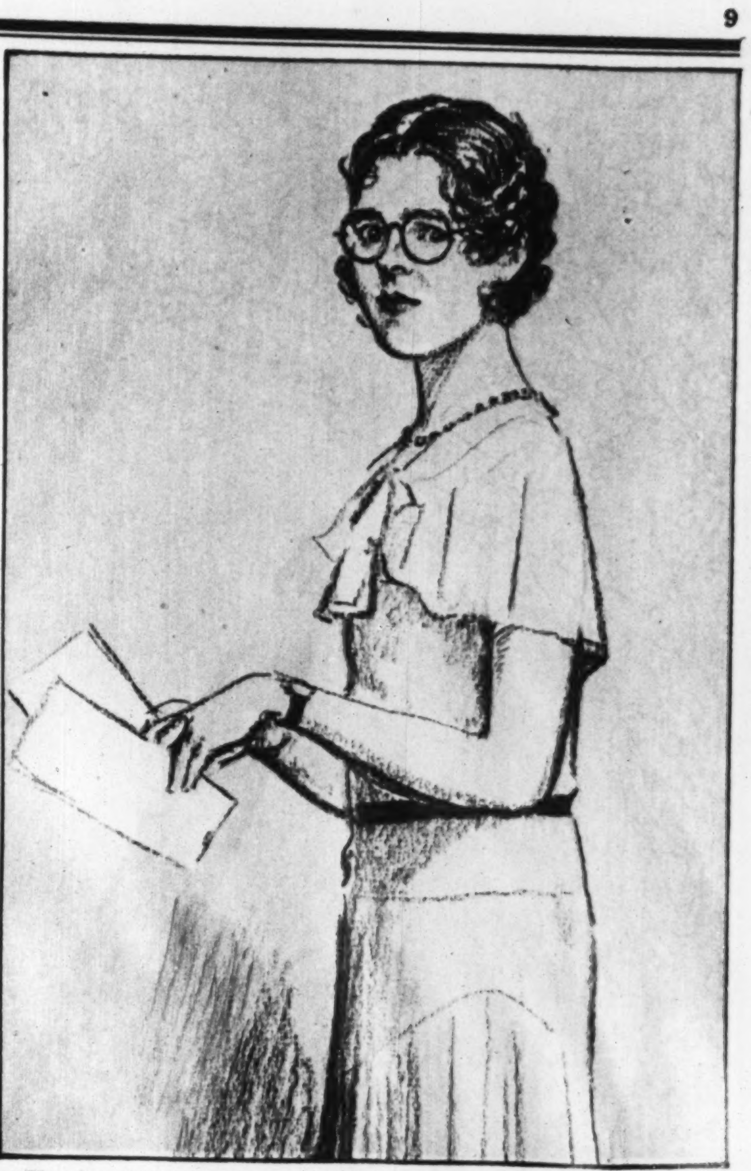
[Copyright: 1930: By The Chicago Tribune.]



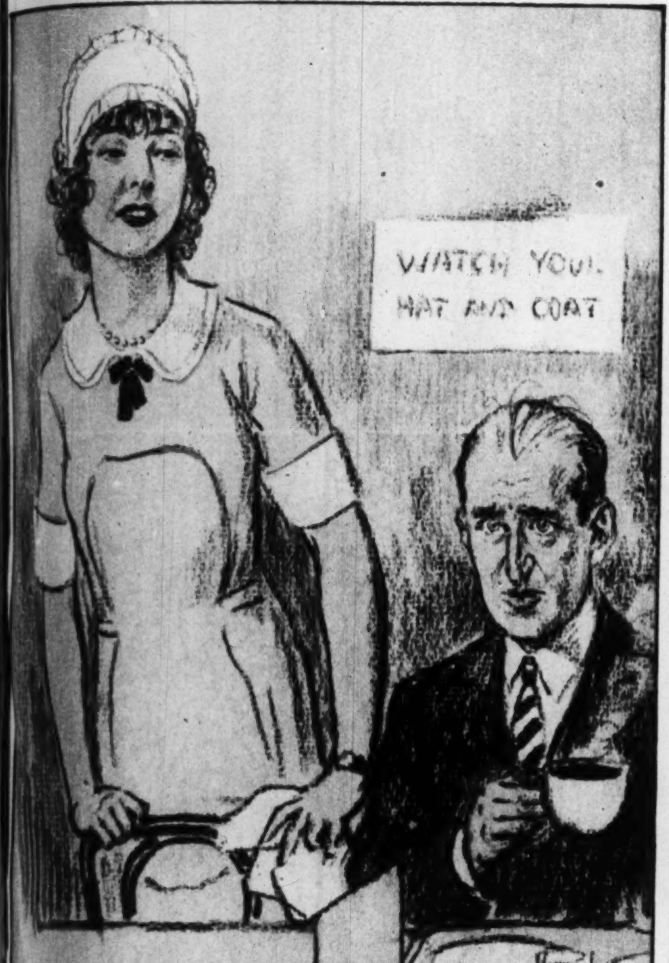
The sight of a working girl resisting temptation is a noble spectacle, and it is what you have before you right here. This lovely girl stenog is sorely tempted to order a Napoleon and a peach frisk with grated nuts, whipped cream, and candied cherries for her lunch, but, her better nature having triumphed, she is lunching of a bowl of milk and graham crackers.



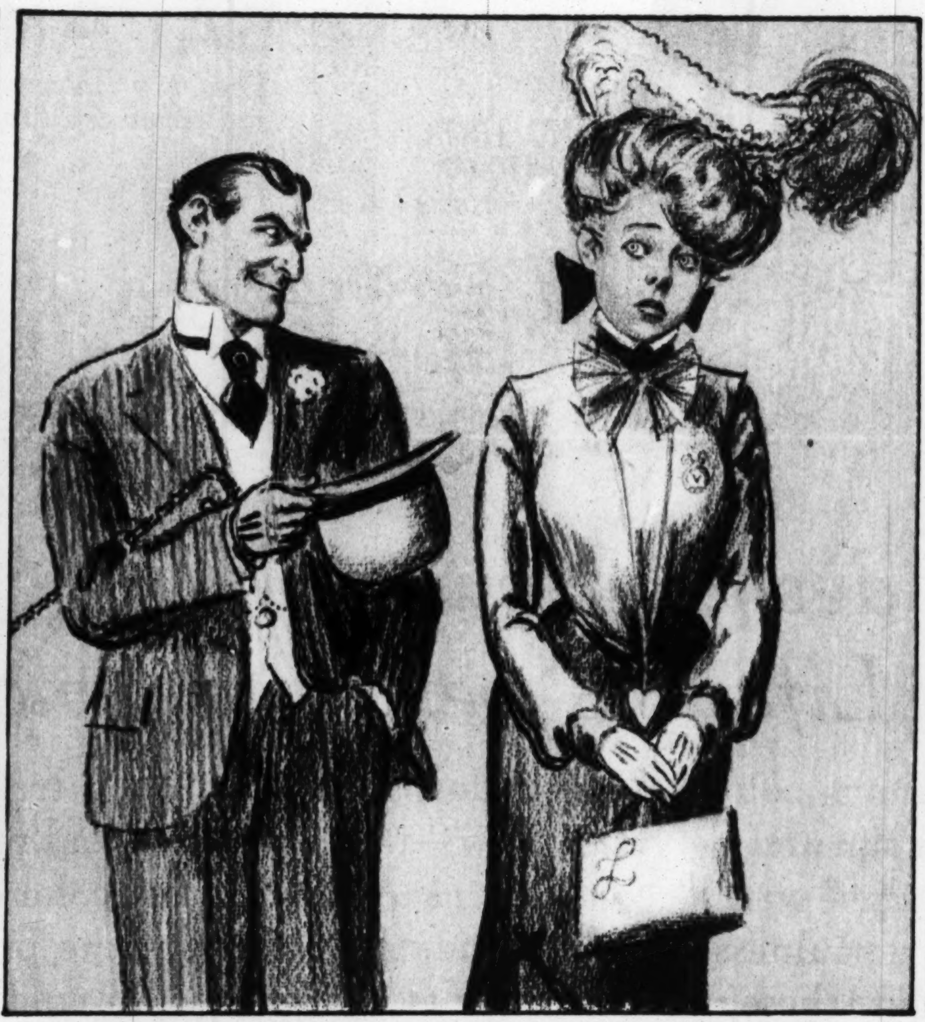
"You great big — — ! ! ! ! What the — do I care whether you get your number!" Just a lovely switchboard operator, who, forgetful of the voice with the smile, for the moment yields to temptation and talks back to an irate subscriber.



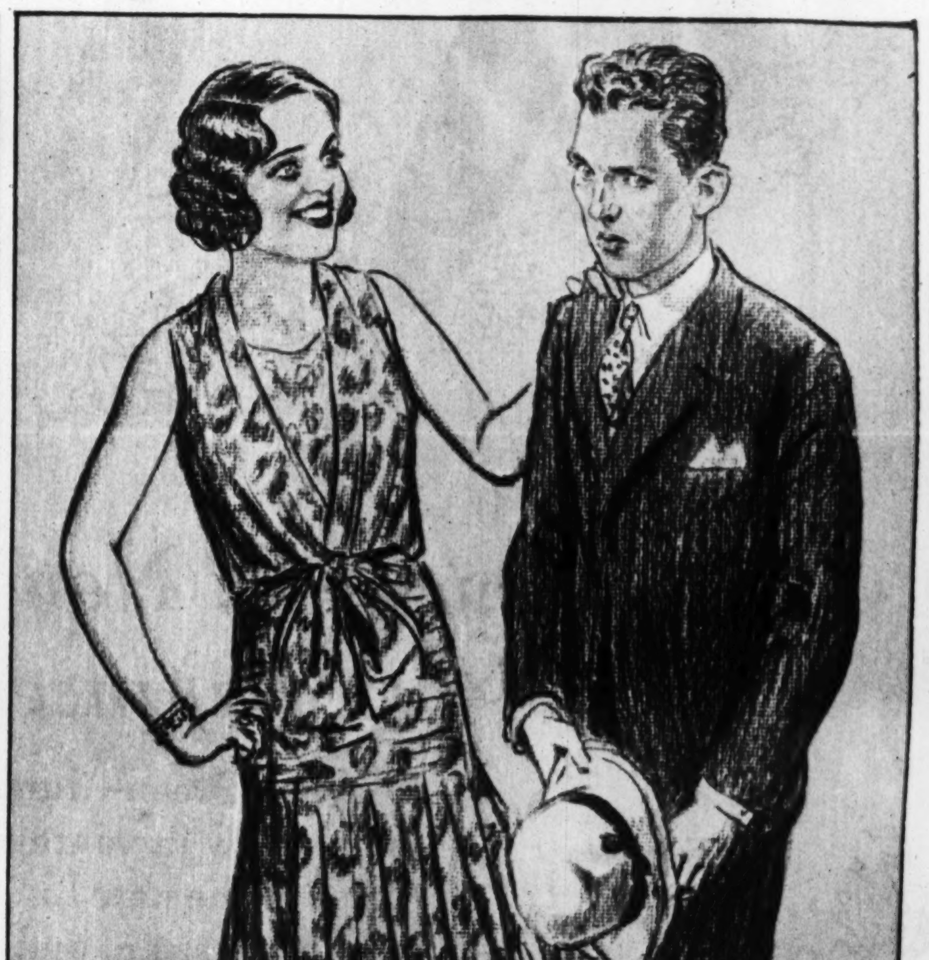
Hazel, private secretary and tower of strength to an insurance office, is going to yield to temptation and tell her employers where they get off one of these eight hour days. "I know more about fire and theft, property damage and accident policies," she'll say, "than you and your partner put together!"



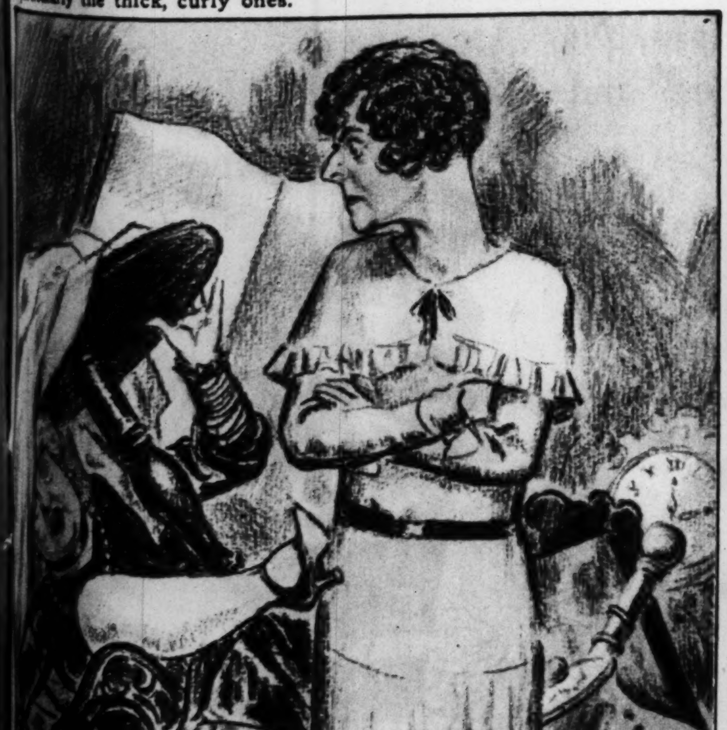
Waitresses have their own temptations to face. You'd never guess—now would you?—that the most difficult thing a waitress in a quick lunch palace has to meet is to keep hold of herself and not run her fingers through the hair of a male customer. (Just to see if it's a water wave.) They look down at so many male heads that they just can't keep feeling friendly toward the scalps—particularly the thick, curly ones.



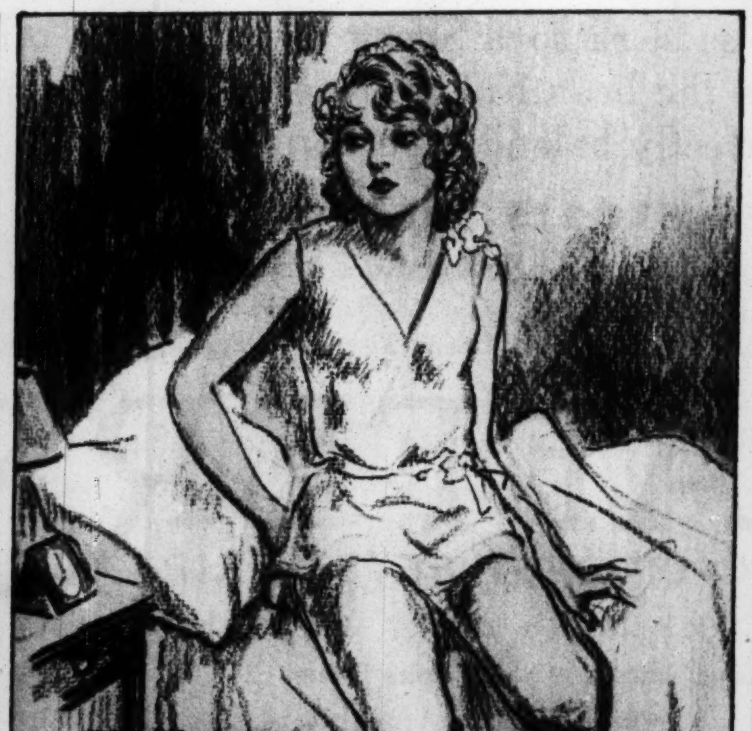
The most terrible temptations lay in wait for ye olde time woiking goil. She could hardly step out on the street without being subject to the attentions of some loose living male (who had seen her behind the counter selling dress shields and good-sense-corset-waists), and, of course, she had to tell him she could never go to the bill at the Palace with him unless her parents came along. O, it was terrible!



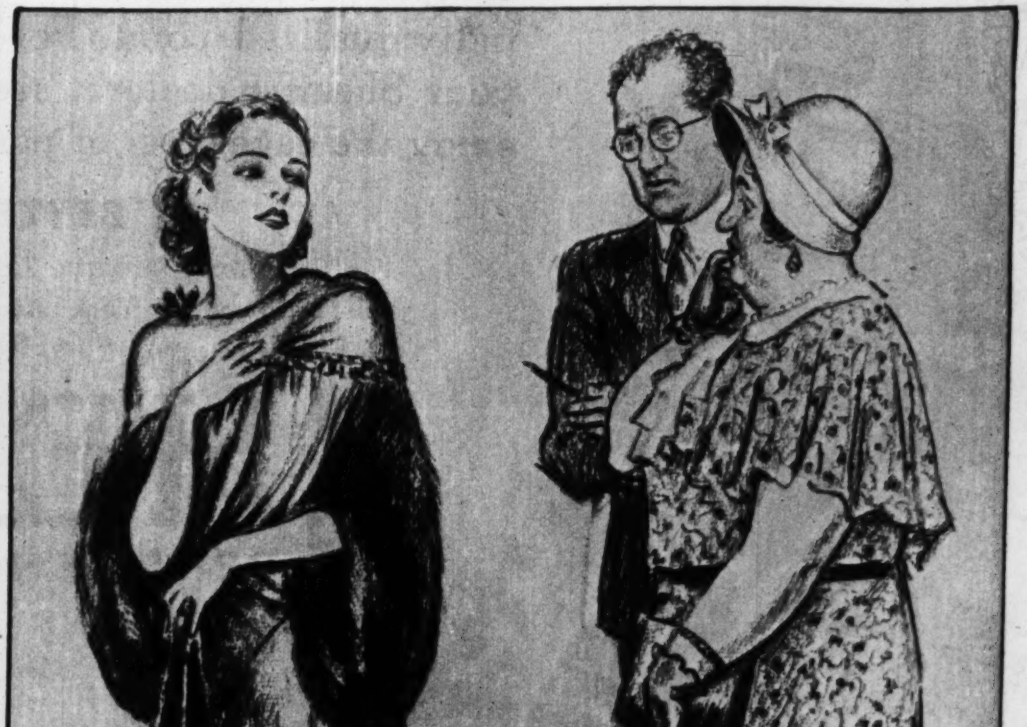
But in these enlightened days things are very different. In the accompanying scene we have a working girl of 1930—a buyer from the lingerie department—trying to entice a visiting drummer out for a dinner and the pictures. There are so many working girls today that conditions of twenty or thirty years ago are reversed. Alas, it is the gentleman who is being tempted and lured out, while his little wife waits in vain for the long distance call her drummer boy promised to put through. Let's hope that heaven will protect the working boy.



This roughhouse is what a long suffering lady decorator is tempted to inaugurate one of these days, when a fractious client changes her so called mind once too often about the galoons, the general color scheme, and the original brasses.



The biggest temptation in a working girl's life is that early Monday morning urge to go back to bed and not show up at the store till Tuesday—if then.



Ever and anon the voice of the tempter whispers in the shell-like ear of the girl who tries on the imported models for the charge customers, and only great force of character saves her from obeying that impulse to say: "This wrap won't be any good to you, madam, you'd look terrible in anything!"

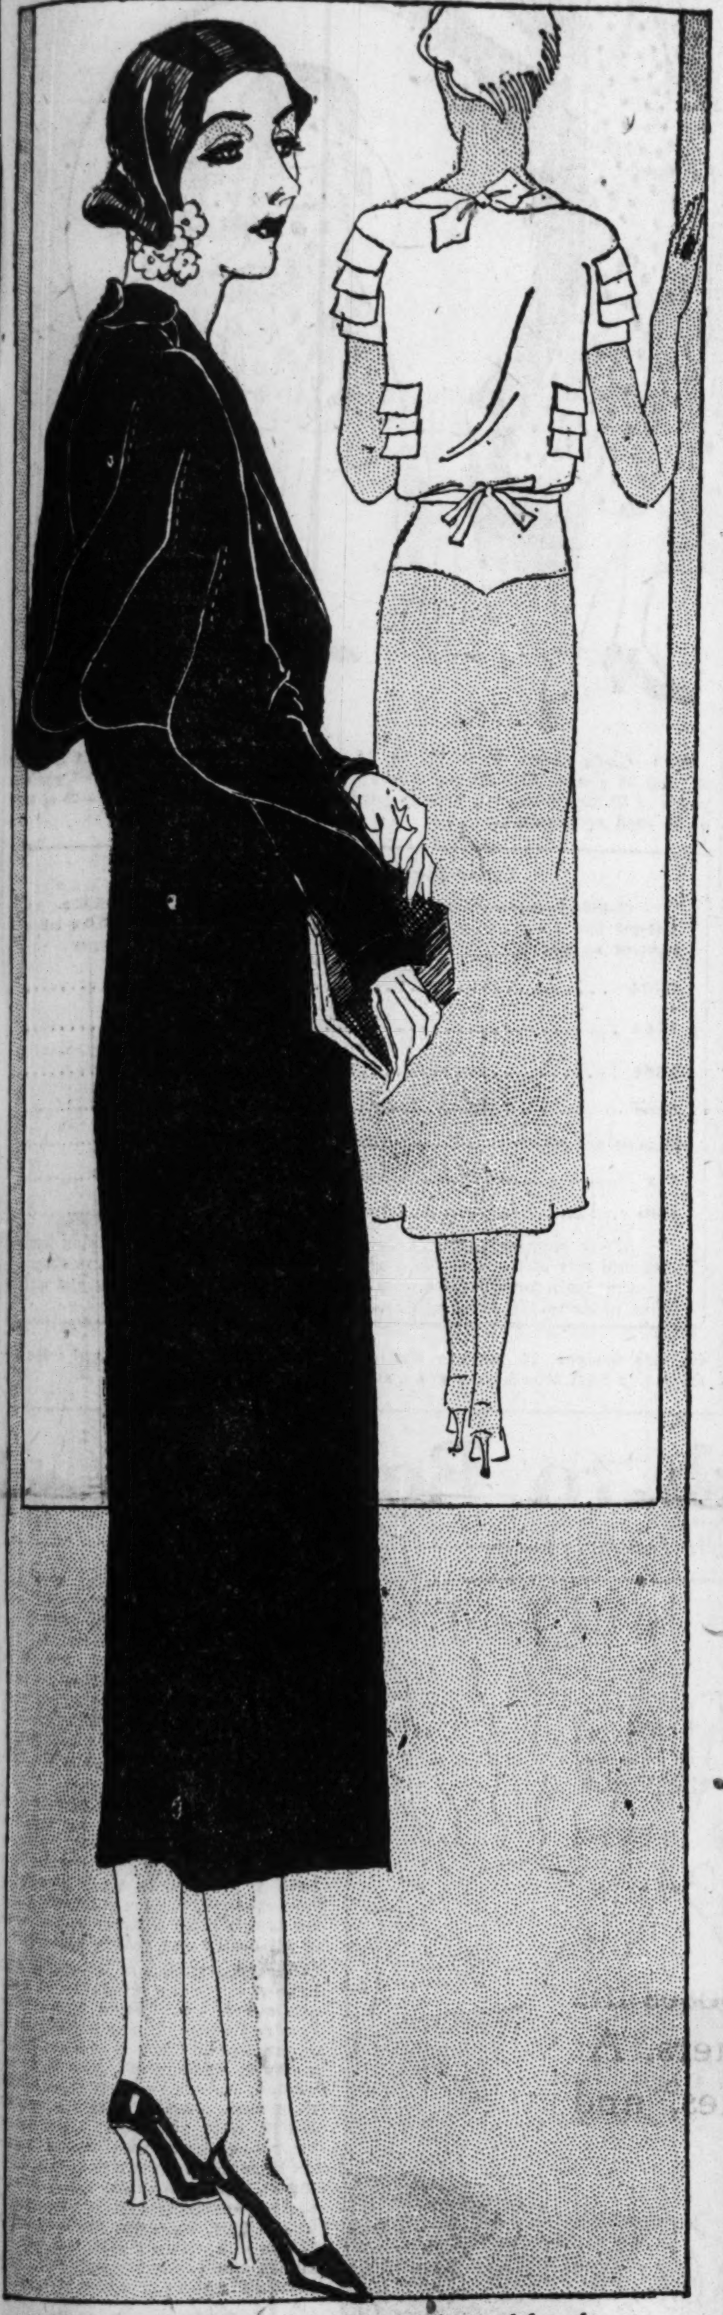
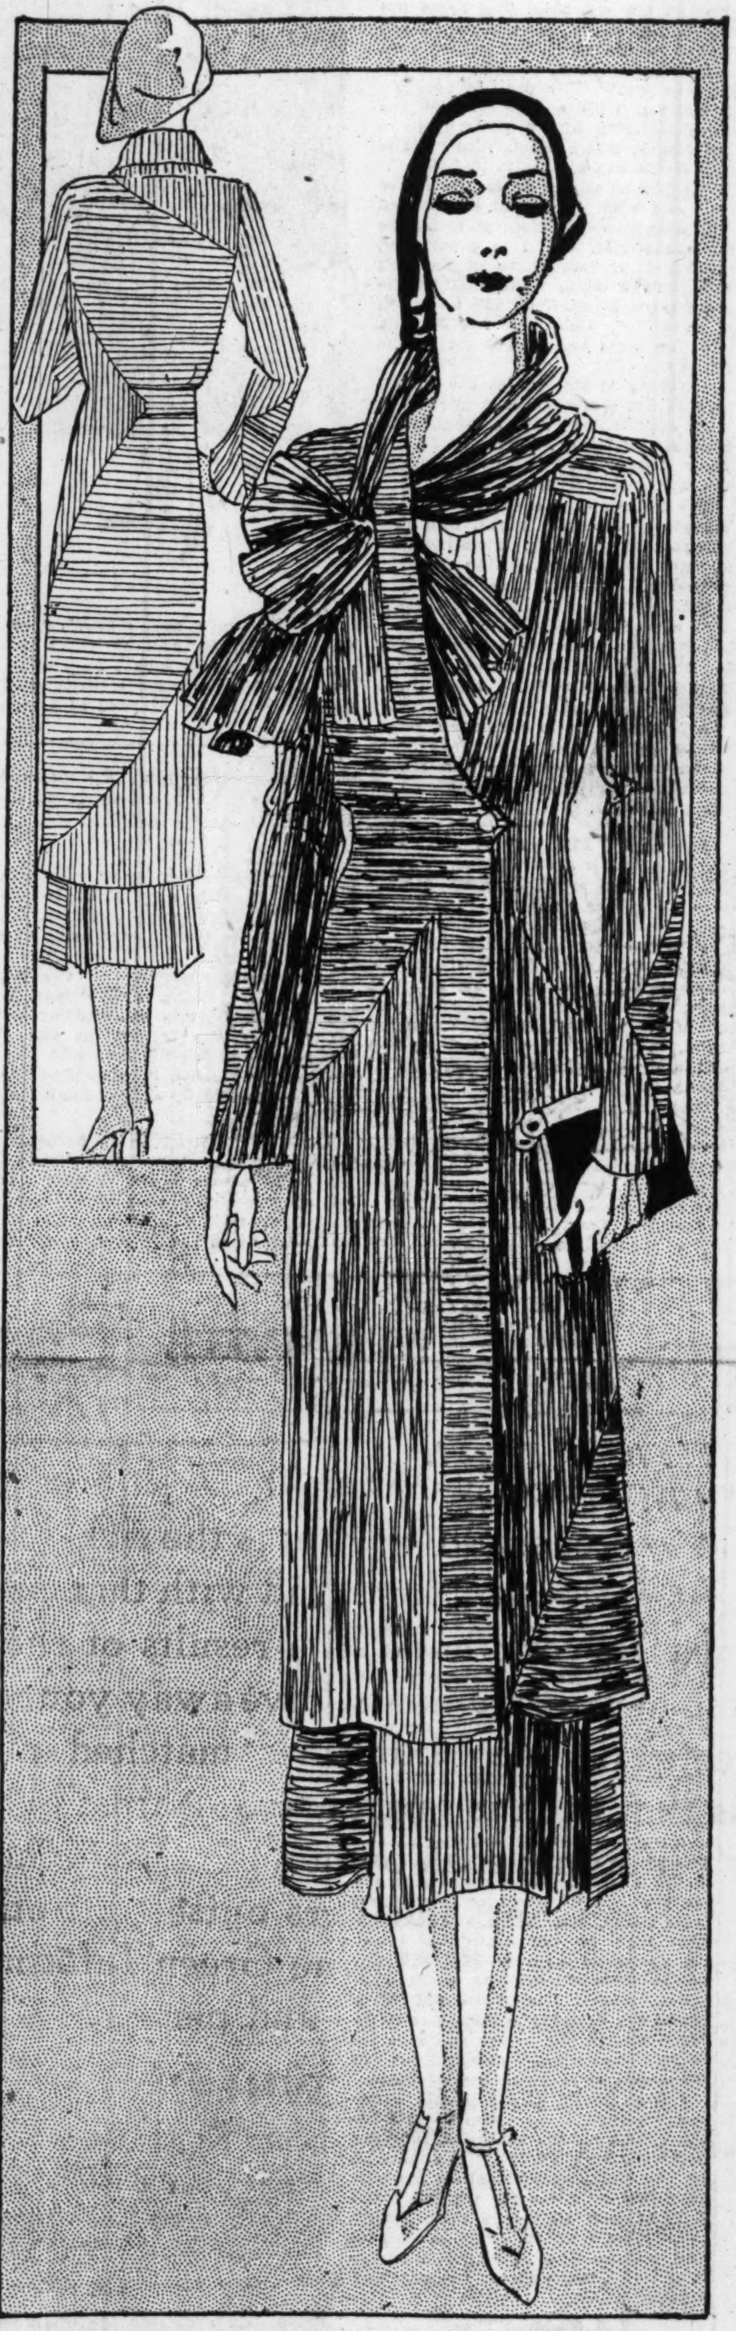
PARIS LOOKS AHEAD TO SEASON OF SOBRIETY

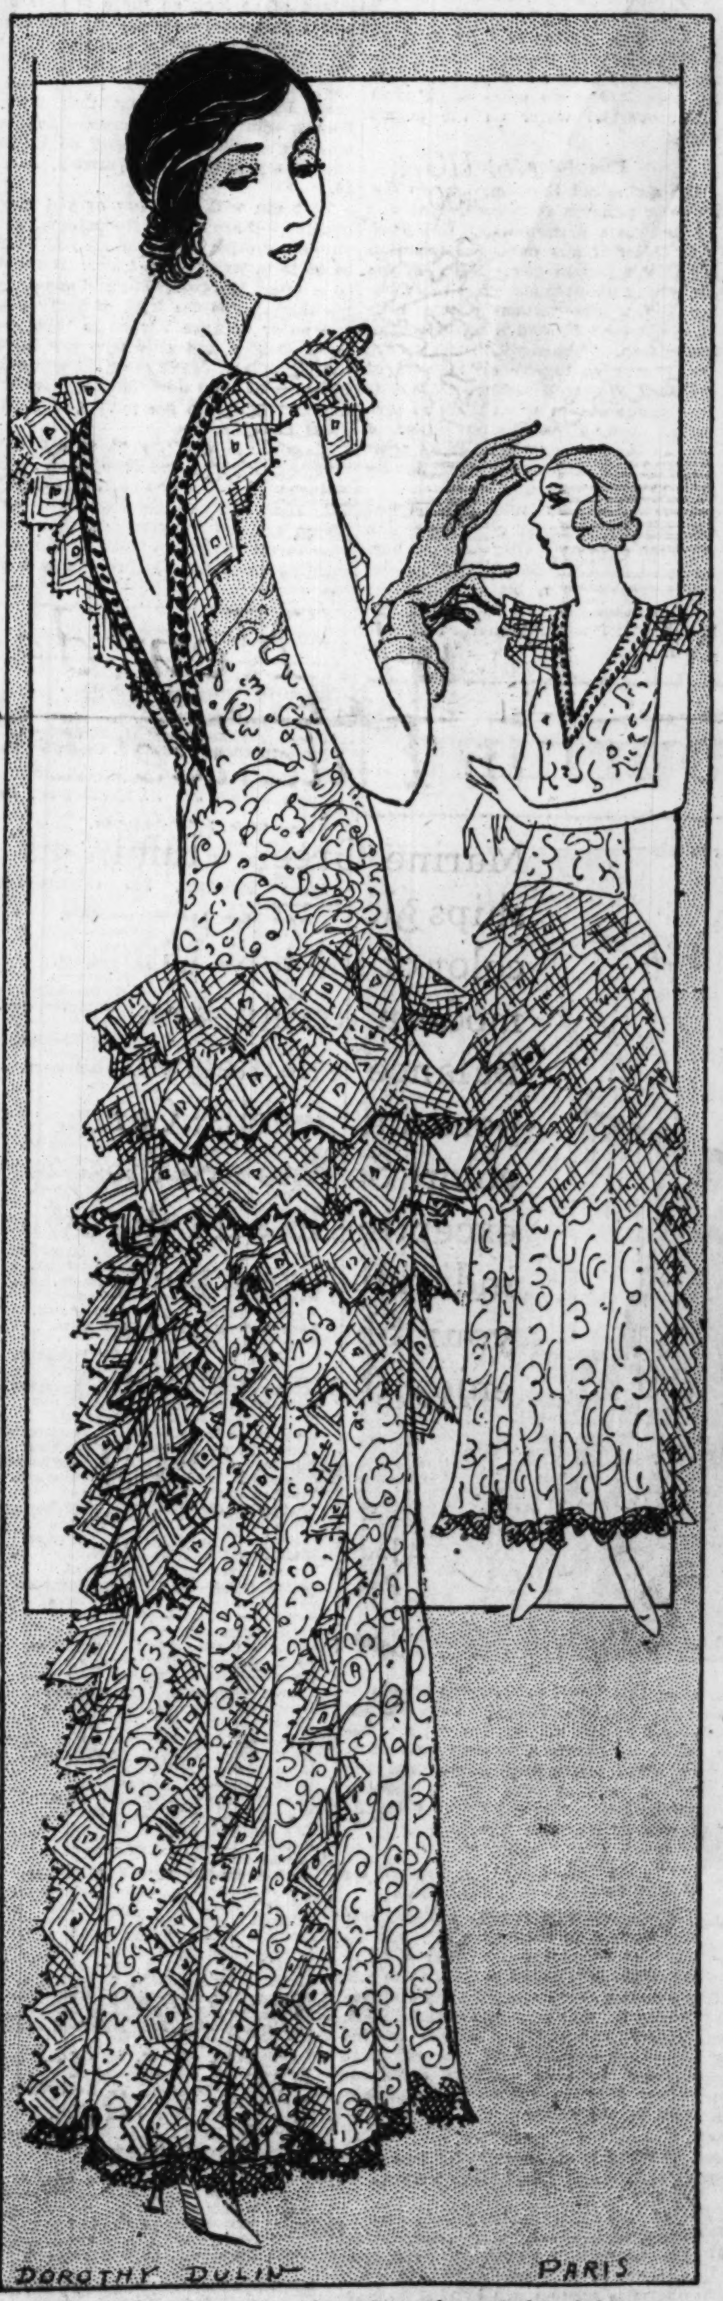
Designers Are Using Rich, Dark Shades of Blue, Green, Red and Brown and Lusterless Materials for Early Autumn Wear



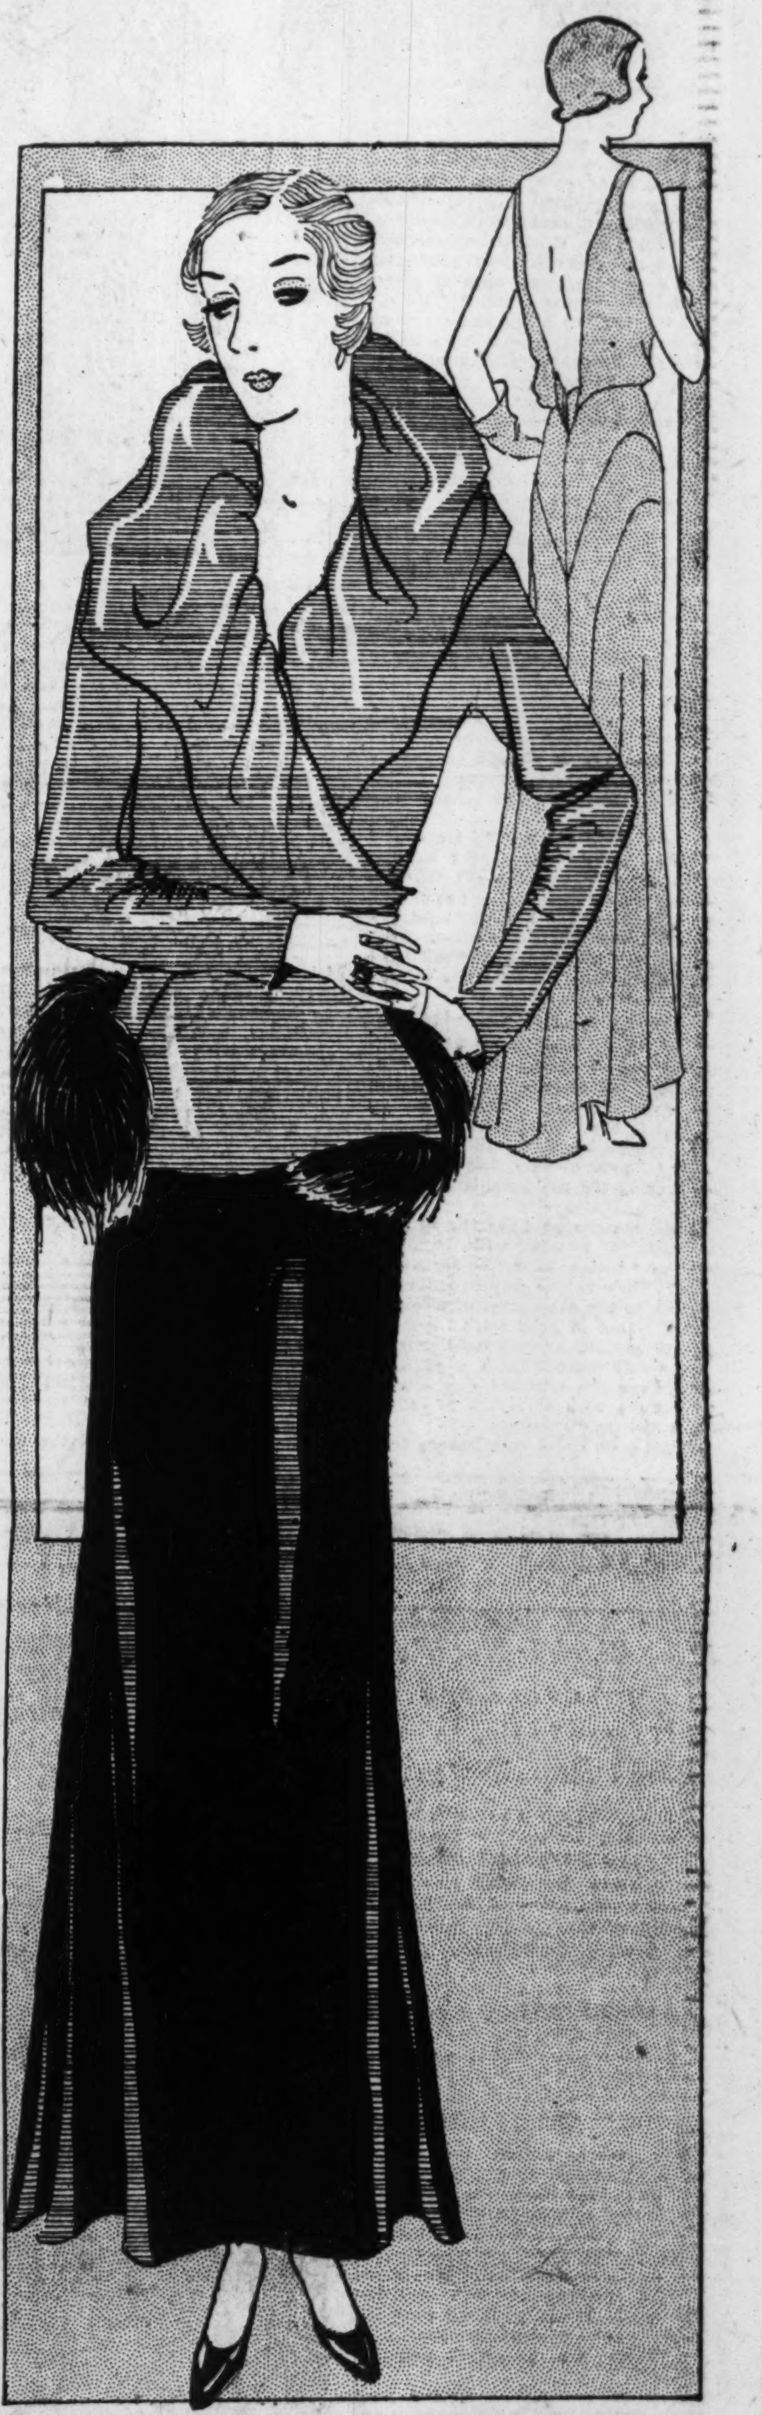
This brown woolen coat from Augustabernard has the new wide shoulder line that makes your waist look slim. It's achieved by three petal panels at the top of the sleeve. The blouse of this ensemble is pink crepe.



Maggy Rouff's new tailored suit has a long jacket and skirt of red and black woolen. The scarf collar is unusual.



This Worth evening dress is made entirely of lacy horsehair braid. It is white except for the ruffle at the hem, which is black, and the jet band at the decollete.



Augustabernard designed this evening ensemble with a dark blue velvet coat trimmed with black fox and a black crepe dress.

Paris Snapshots

¶ Among the newest millinery materials are velvets that are embroidered with string or stitched in geometrical designs. LeMonnier uses them for her new double hats that have inside bonnets of tulle encrusted with chenille.

¶ Reboux is fashioning her first fall turbans out of wide bands of taupe which she drapes on your head.

¶ At Deauville smart women are wearing white more than any other color. They wear it with blue accessories for daytime and with red at night.

¶ Red and blue, Worth's most successful costume color combination, has inspired a new jewel union of rubies and sapphires that make many smart necklaces and bracelets. These jewels are striking worn with white frocks.

¶ Smart Parisiennes who do not want to let their hair grow are pinning on false curls after dark, to secure that mass of ringlets at the nape of the neck which every woman seems to want these days.

By Bettina Bedwell.

PARIS.—(Special.)—Woman may be a gay and giddy creature—as some people say—but she's in for a season of sobriety verging on somberness if Paris has her say this fall. Be frivolous while you may, old styles are a-flying, and the new ones are going to substitute measured elegance for gayer qualities. I refer to the matter of color and fabric in fashions. Paris hasn't any intention of making the mode into a sedate old ladyish affair so far as silhouette is concerned, but I am told on all sides by the great fabric makers, and the color experts, and the couturiers, that we are in for a season of sober, even somber, colors and materials that have a dead, lusterless richness without any high lights in it this fall. There will be no playing up to the limelight. Everything is to be toned to the amateur side of the style footlights.

However, there's a pleasant side to this. When Paris says rich, she means rich, and beautiful subdued embroideries, shades and materials will make up in opulence what they lack in crude brilliance. And, anyway, the eternal desire for novelty will certainly be satisfied by this new note in fashions. Black is, naturally, the prize shade of soberness but, oddly enough, colors in the sober season to come will, in most cases, take precedence over black. They will, however, be colors that get near to the ebon without actually being it.

Dark blues like the sky at midnight in summer will be leaders, and they will not be regular midnight blues, for they will either have a bit of the tone of aquamarine in them, or verge on the violet. Deep myrtle green and the greens you see in cypress and cedar trees will be another trio of the somber shades of chic. Browns, as I have said before, that are dark but with wine and violet in them, will be among the most flattering of the new colors of Paris fashions. Deep, dark reds like wine and corinth, and the special old port red that has lots of brown in it will be fashionable colors, and it is rumored that copper brown is to be introduced at the official fall fashion shows in August. Prune color and some deep purple are on the Paris color list.

Every woman who would be chic will have to be a good color mixer, too, for combining colors is going to keep right on being the favorite art of the smart woman. Difficult but stunning color combinations like dark corinth red united to dusty pink, and dark brown united to pale blue will mark the distinguished ensemble.

Naturally, the light shade of such unions will be applied sparingly, in details or as a blouse with a fall suit, or maybe simply a scarf or handkerchief. Some of the Paris dressmakers, notably Augustabernard, who dresses more fashionable women than almost any other couturier in Paris, are combining two extremely dark shades in one costume and getting strikingly beautiful effects thereby.

Augustabernard favors combinations of dark blue with black, and does some of her handsomest ensembles in these colors. Wine red with brown, or darkest blue, are two other sober color harmonies that are offered by the Paris grande couture.

The passing of patterned tweeds is one aspect of this sobering up of styles that I have already mentioned. When woolens are patterned they are given invisible stripes and such decorations as you see on the expensive suits that conservative business men affect. There will be a whole flock of suedelike materials for daytime, which, as you know, are excessively rich and quietly elegant in appearance.

Spongy looking wool crepes and dull-surfaced silk crepes will be more emphasized and there are the lovely pile velvets of which I have already spoken. These do much to make fashions more luxurious. Bianchini has a brand new dull satin that's the most beautiful stuff you can imagine, and it hasn't any sheen to it at all. This material won't be out even in the Paris couture until fall, but it will be an important part of this movement toward sobriety in dress.

A forerunner of the coming mode was the inside-out stockings our girls in the states can claim the honor of having made a world-wide vogue. Creped and dull-surfaced stockings are just beginning their career in fashions, and they will be accompanied by shoes that will be made of mat kid, suede, antelope and dull box calf.

The whole scheme is designed to allow the high lights of your personality and your personal beauty a chance to shine without competition from your clothes, that are intended to be the accompaniment to yourself and not the whole show.

One of the new first-fall coats of Augustabernard is shown in a sketch today, and this coat with the waist and skirt that accompany it are in the sober color and fabric mood of which I am speaking. The coat is made of wine-brown suedelike woolen, and so is the skirt. The blouse is of pale, dusty pink crepe. The movement of the sleeves of this coat is a notable one in Paris fashions. Augustabernard places three short petal panels on the upper sleeve to give it a slight flare, and the short sleeves of the blouse with their several horizontal bands also increase the width of the shoulder line.

The waistline of the coat is fitted in, and looks more slender because the shoulders are made to appear so broad. The coat has a small turnover collar with petals across the back. The blouse is newer than any tuck-in waist. It extends over the top of the skirt several inches and is tied in tightly at the normal waistline by a string belt.

The evening ensemble sketched is also from Augustabernard and is in her preferred color scheme of black and rich, dark blue. The coat is made of dark blue pile velvet, and is banded at the hips with black fox fur. The collar is particularly flattering, being a shawl cut gathered around the neckline.

The evening dress worn with this coat is made of black crepe, with an unusual decolette that extends in a narrow V almost to the waistline in back and is very high in front and slightly diagonal, being almost up to the top of the shoulder on the right side and at the armpit on the left. The skirt falls in soft circular folds from the hipline to the insteps.

The Worth evening gown shown in another sketch is made of white horsehair lace with a narrow ruffle at the hem of black horsehair lace. The decollete of this frock is banded with jet embroidery and there are ruffles over the shoulders to widen their line, in the newest Parisian way. The body of the frock is fitted princess and a series of stiff little ruffles begin horizontally at the hipline on the skirt, extending down in vertical lines to the hem at the back and sides, giving this dress an entirely novel and attractive effect. The skirt, itself, is gathered scantily at the hipline, and is quite full around the bottom.

One of Maggy Rouff's first fall tailored suits is shown in another sketch. This is made of smooth woolen in an indefinite mixture of dark red and black. The bias cutting of the long jacket is original. It is fitted in at the waistline and buttoned with one button. The sleeves are in one piece with the band at the top of the shoulders, and there is a scarf instead of a collar. This scarf is tied through a slit at the right side of the closing.

The Tactful Calldown

By Doris Blake

When It's Necessary to Reprimand a Man, Do It with Some Sympathy For His Feelings, Says Doris.

THERE are ways and ways of calling people down. One way may make a friend for life, another way make an enemy, and still another way of dressing some one down for a justifiable reason may result in killing what might have turned out a perfectly good romance.

As witness the experience of Walter. Walter works in a large office. The girl is about 30, intelligent, virtuous, good looking, in short, as Walter reports, a desirable young woman. After three years' office acquaintance Walter and the girl had graduated from a how-do-you-do form of greeting into the more familiar "Hello." And Walter, about the same age as the girl, about the same type as to character, thought a great deal about her, so he admits.

"Being a type that respects women," Walter takes up his story, "and believing in being a gentleman at all times, not being forward, rather backward, in fact, what was there to do but wait for time to decide? When chance permitted I would pass her desk and we would indulge in a few words, mostly light banter.

"Well, one bright day, feeling a bit cheerful, I thought I would say something in modern slang. Not being adept in its handling, I should not have ventured it. But I did and I guess I chose the wrong one. I went to ask her a question and started with 'Listen, kid.' I finished my question, but that was the end for me. The reply, after a moment's hesitation, burned me up. I felt cheaper than the proverbial two cents.

"All I could say was, 'I am sorry.' I meant to say also that I did not mean to have offended but that remained unsaid because I felt so darned cheap and for the rest of the day I wished I was out of the place. That one remark taken in a different light than it was ever intended has written finis to my romance."

Wrong Way of Reproving.

Now, that's what is meant by one wrong way of administering a rebuff. The girl had every right to object to the greeting, but Walter gives an insight into a "bungler's" mind and from where we sit in judgment the poor fellow's blunder was a pretty light thing for the humiliating comeback.

True, many men have the ill taste to address women with, "Listen, kid," or "Listen, baby," or some such term. Their motive may be indulgent. It may be the expression of affection. But it is not in good taste. Another girl, more familiar with male psychology, would have offered a mild rebuke were she offended and covered the rebuke with a remark to restore the man's good nature.

Single girls could take lessons from wives—that is, wives who operate quietly and effectively in reforming speech or a matter of conduct. Wise wives do not jump down a man's throat because he happens to indulge in a popular expression even though it is not pleasant to their ears. If they offer an immediate objection, they do it in a cajoling tone, with the mild voiced comment that they do not like to hear their husbands talk like that. Knowing men, smart wives know their best course is never to make a man feel embarrassed if they can get their message across without any such lowering of male dignity.

A Fatal Error.

It's fatal for a single woman, unless she really wants to dismiss a man, to take him up sharply on a blunder. It's foolish, too, when a gentler remonstrance would make a friend, instead of a disappointed suitor. Naturally, in order to restore his own confidence, a man under such circumstances will check the woman off as a grouch, or a prude or a chip bearer. And he may even take a few other men into his confidence.

Women underestimate the power that men have to suffer from backwardness or self-consciousness. It seems a woman trait. But it isn't. Because of its supposed womanishness and its utter uselessness out in the earning world of men, it is possibly fought harder by the so-called sterner sex. The result is that the "freshness" a man exhibits sometimes is nothing more nor less than an attempt to appear hardboiled. Women of the unpoised type, too, commit blunders of speech and conduct from sheer embarrassment. They do and say things they would give worlds not to be guilty of. But they are not noticeably less fine creatures, basically, for the temporary confusion.

Some men, as well as some girls, need to be called down and to be called down in no uncertain terms. They need to be put in their places. But the objectionable species upon whom frank rebuke is fully merited, rarely suffer any pangs of embarrassment. They are hard shelled and verbal assault has no more effect than the proverbial water on the duck's back.

Knowledge Helps.

It's a fine art knowing how to dispense a painless reprimand—but one that serves a woman well. One prospers better if she possesses intuition or what is just as good—if she knows something about men. The most biting critics are women whose lives have not been blessed with male companionship. Women with brothers are rarely ever so touchy on matters of the kind Walter describes. The surface things do not affect them so seriously. And, given the advantage of boys in the family, women know their capacity for suffering from having done or said the wrong thing.

The well known human touch you hear so much about solves many a situation such as Walter plunged himself into. A correction quite in order but softened by a bit of sympathy for the other person's embarrassment is the friend winning method of calldown.

Conventional Mourning

By Helen Bartlett

Deep Black Is Not Worn as Much or as Long as It Used to Be, in the Victorian Age.

Miss Bartlett's two booklets, "Table Setting and Service for Luncheon" and "Table Setting and Service for Dinner," may be obtained by sending two stamped, addressed envelopes to this department. Address Helen Bartlett, Sunday Department, Chicago Tribune.

"I UNDERSTAND that mourning conventions have changed considerably, but that some rules regarding it still exist. Just what would constitute widow's mourning now, as regards dress and conduct? M. L."

The somber, almost interminable mourning of past decades is no longer necessary, it is true. The war, when death was commonplace, had much to do with this, probably, and so does the increasing busy-ness of both men and women—particularly the latter, who were supposed to do most of the lamenting. Mourning is not worn too long now and personal preferences in the matter are expressed and respected.

A widow's mourning lasts a year at its deepest and is followed by another year of lighter or half mourning, although this is determined by personal feeling rather than convention. An older widow may choose to keep to black and half mourning for the balance of her life; a mother may choose never to go back to colors. But even for deep mourning, the heavy, long crêpe veils seldom appear after the funeral; if any veil is worn, it is a net one. The black worn is lustrous, not satin or velvet, and either pearls or dull jet are worn sparingly, as jewelry.

And no mourning wear, for widow either old or young, should be so smart and striking as to look like a wartime cartoon of the merry widow. The last word in mourning fashion is just a shade too pat, usually, to have the dignity and inconspicuousness mourning ought to have. After the first year black and white, lavender [particularly for older women], and gray, or gray and black are worn for six months or a year.

The New Feeling.

The new feeling about mourning, however, is best expressed in the current conventions about conduct. It was once considered utterly heartless and equally vulgar for any grieving person to seek or pretend to enjoy even a moment's distraction for a year or so after the bereavement. Not so now, although even today a woman in deep mourning wouldn't go out in gay society. But a widow may, after a reasonable time, and if it helps her any, go to concerts, to the opera [although not in a box], to the theater, or visit quietly and inconspicuously with her friends when she wishes to. She would not wear her heavy crêpes on such occasions, but she would be dressed simply in deep, lusterless black.

A widow always wears mourning, at least for a year. For a parent, a sister, or a brother, or a son or daughter the kind and length of time mourning is worn can depend as much on feeling as on convention; some persons refuse to wear mourning at all. All white is mourning and very good for summer wear.

Answers to Queries.

"Will you please tell me where to place the initial on a dinner cloth and napkins? The cloth is three yards long and two wide and the napkins are 22 inches. I am using a four inch letter for the cloth and one inch for the napkins. L. W."

These are the general rules: For an oblong table the monogram or initial is placed at either end, or at both ends. For a round or square table the monogram is placed in one corner or in opposite corners. A four inch letter is about right for the size of your cloth. Placing the initial on napkins must depend somewhat on the pattern of the damask; it may be in the exact center of the napkin when the napkin is folded in three parts, or it may be in one corner.

"Who leads the way down the aisle in a theater, the man or woman? —E. W."

For some reason or other this is a much discussed point, and it's really of no particular importance. Ordinarily the man, who has the tickets, hands them to the usher who leads the way to the seats followed by the woman, who must take the inside seat, anyway. The man always takes the aisle seat. The important thing is to be seated quickly and with no confusion.

"Who gives the first sign of recognition when a man and woman meet? Who shakes hands, or extends a hand? When does a man take off his hat to a woman?—J. T. D."

The woman makes the first sign of recognition and extends her hand if she cares to. With good friends, however, this would probably be spontaneous. A man is obliged to lift his hat —and really lift it, not "tip" it— when he passes a woman he knows, or when he is with some one who knows and speaks to a passing woman. He raises his hat when he meets or leaves a woman.

"Is it considered incorrect for women to smoke in public?—A. P."

By some it is considered incorrect for women to smoke at all, but we don't hold that view. However, being conspicuous is never in good taste and we do not think women should smoke when it makes them conspicuous. Neither should they smoke in the home of their friends who object to it, nor between courses at meals unless they have been given permission by the hostess.

"What is the correct headwear for attendance at an evening wedding?— S. B."

If the attendants wear evening dress, no headwear is necessary unless the ceremony takes place in a Roman Catholic or Episcopal church, in which churches women are obliged to have their heads covered and must wear hats or bandeaux.

"In a small home wedding where there is only one attendant does the bridesmaid enter the room with the best man or does she precede the bride, walking alone, as in a church wedding? Also, does the bridal party face the guests?—DOROTHY N."

The bridesmaid walks in first, alone. The best man comes in with the groom, following the clergyman and takes his place before the bridesmaid enters. During the ceremony the bride and groom face the clergyman, their backs to the guests. After the blessing they turn where they are standing and the guests go up to greet them.

Sally Plans a Party to See Funny Talkie

Marx Brothers' Antics Will Amuse 100.

By Sally Joy Brown.

Our next party, boys and girls, is to be an unusual treat, and it's one you'll all love. When the four Marx brothers, those inimitable comedians, were here last winter in their stage success, "Animal Crackers," they fairly took the city by storm and people who had seen the play laughed for weeks at the memory of it. Now, after a long period of waiting, Balaban & Katz are bringing the talkie version of it to their McVicker's theater and they have invited me to see it on Thursday afternoon, Aug. 28, and I am going to take one hundred of you with me.

If you haven't seen these four artist comedians—Harpo, Groucho, Chicco, and Zeppo—there is an entertainment in store for you, such as you never had before and if you have seen them you know that one never gets tired hearing them and watching them as they clown about the stage or screen.

Surely, Harpo is something to see—one never hears him—with his tightly curled red wig, his silly grin and wide rolling eyes. Groucho is the "wise-cracking" member of this quartet and the nifties and puns roll off his tongue in such rapid succession that you can't possibly catch them all. You want to remember every one of them—they are so excruciatingly funny—and days later you'll be saying to yourself, "What is that line from the second scene?" or "Wasn't Groucho rare as the explorer!" Chicco is a master comedian with a style and an accent all his own, and Zeppo you'll remember as the handsome one.

"It's a combination that will be talked of as long as there is theater and I think we are particularly fortunate to be able to see them and hear them on the screen. The plot of the picture is terribly funny—but, then, I'll tell you about that later. I know what you are interested in this morning is what you must do to be one of my guests on Thursday, Aug. 28.

To begin with, any boy or girl may compete—there are no limitations, territorial or otherwise—and all you have to do is to write me a letter. It must be a letter, however, that will convince me that this is the kind of party you will enjoy because I want to take the hundred boys and girls who will have the best time. Have your letter reach me no later than next Thursday morning and in it tell me your name, address and age.

If you are anxious to attend our party at the Jack and Jill theater next Saturday, I know you've been waiting for the list, which appears below. These are the winners and they will receive an invitation with details for meeting some time before the date of the party:

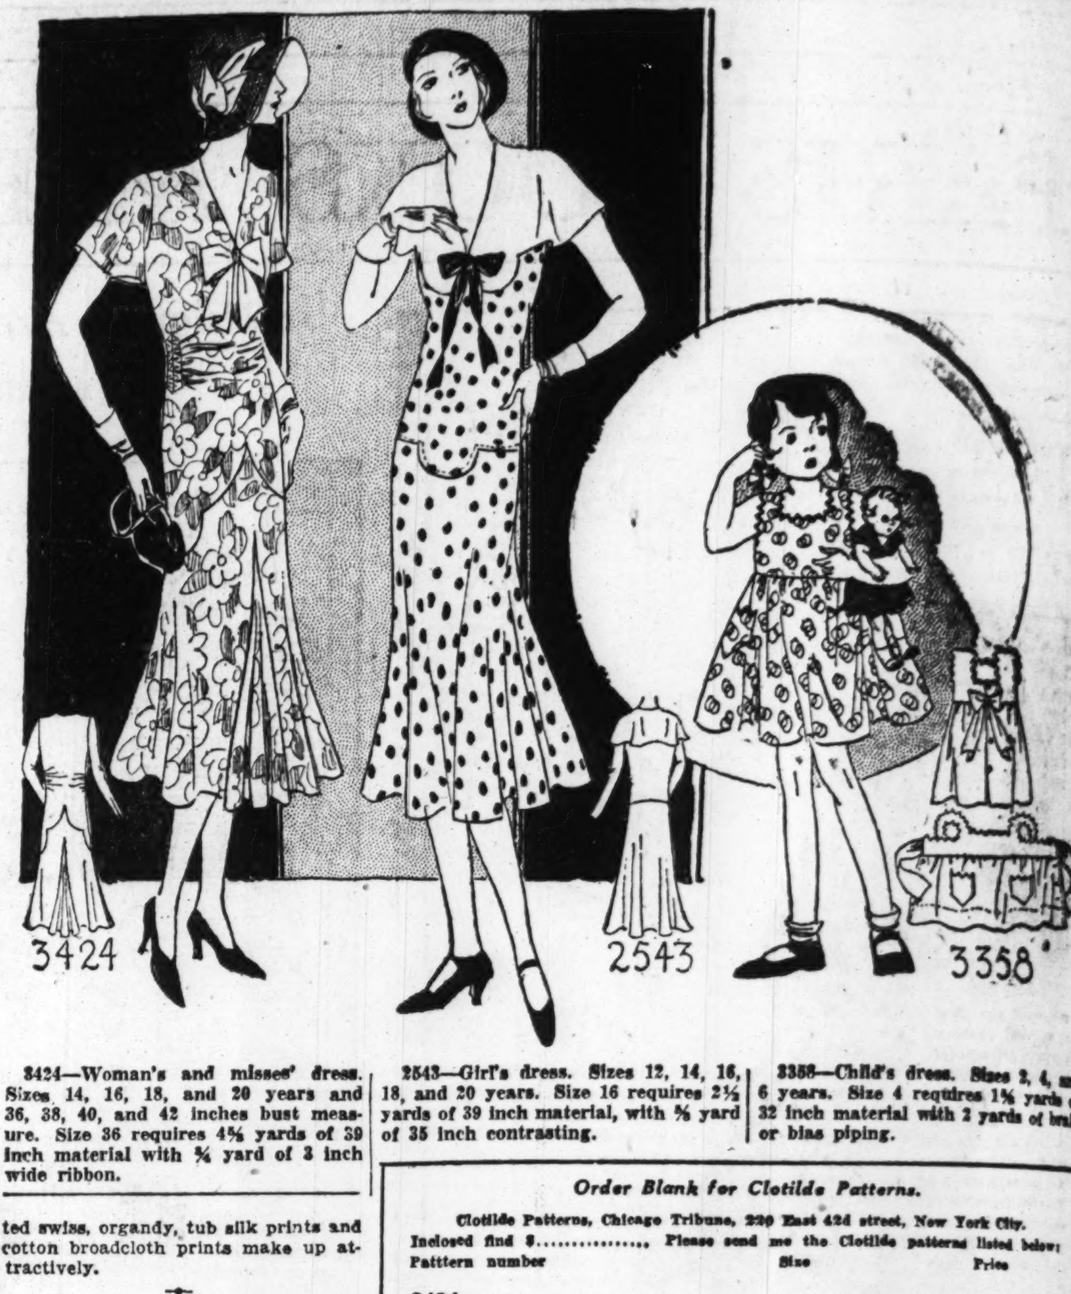
Patterns and How to Use Them

By Clotilde

The Home Dressmaker Will Find These Patterns as Easy to Use as They Are Practical and Stylish.



3424—Woman's and misses' dress. Sizes 14, 16, 18, and 20 years and 36, 38, 40, and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 4⅝ yards of 39 inch material with ¾ yard of 3 inch wide ribbon.

2543—Girl's dress. Sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, and 20 years. Size 16 requires 2½ yards of 39 inch material, with ⅝ yard of 35 inch contrasting.

3358—Child's dress. Sizes 2, 4, and 6 years. Size 4 requires 1⅝ yards of 32 inch material with 2 yards of braid or bias piping.

GODETS are inserted in the circular skirt of pattern No. 3424, contributing a more than usual fluttery fullness to the hemline. The dress is one that will be just right for immediate wear and won't be at all difficult to make.

The upper part is fitted in to the figure by means of shirring at the side seams, both on the front and back. This shirring gives a swathed effect through the waistline. The dress fits smoothly over the hips and the shaped outline where skirt and upper part join is unusual in outline and extremely pretty. The deep V neckline is finished with a soft bow of the dress material, and a pattern for a full length, fitted sleeve, also for the chic flared cap sleeves is included.

The bottom of the dress, the sleeve caps and neck should all be finished with a narrow bias binding, using the dress material. Cut this accurately, making it three-quarters of an inch wide. Sew it on by hand, holding the dress toward you. Trim the seam off, if necessary, then roll the binding over the seam and hem down on the wrong side.

Anything as circular at the bottom as this dress is should be allowed to hang several days before evening the edge and finishing. For size 36 this dress measures at the bottom about five and one-quarter yards.

The bottom of the waist should be turned up a seam's width, first clipping, where necessary. Then the skirt is pinned to position, letting the skirt edge meet the turned under edge of the waist. Baste carefully to position, then overcast the seam edges together. After this is done two rows of stitching should be put in, one close to the edge and the second one about three-eighths of an inch above.

A printed crêpe in Patou tan, printed in balloon motifs in chartreuse green would be smart, and this design is suitable for georgettes, chiffon and crêpe de chine.

Pattern No. 3358 is for one of those cunning Dutch apron frocks, delightfully cool and smart as well. It may also be used as an apron when one is needed to cover a dressy frock.

It will be just the thing for your youngster to wear during the warm days that are still with us, for it is sleeveless and the square neck is cut comfortably low. It buttons down the back, making it easy to put on and off, and it also irons easily, as it opens out flat.

The straight gathered skirt is stitched to the yoke top, and two patch pockets are set on. The neck and armholes may be finished with ric-rac braid or faced with a contrasting color, using a right side facing.

Sprigged dimity, gingham checks, dotted piqué, linen, flowered lawn, dotted swiss, organdy, tub silk prints and cotton broadcloth prints make up attractively.

Pattern No. 2543 is for an intriguing little frock with a youthful basque bodice, showing snugly fitted hips. The capelet collar is effectively made of a contrasting color, and it may serve in place of short sleeves, or the full length, close fitting sleeve may be made. The skirt is cut circular and measures at the bottom for size 36 about two and five-eighths yards. The bodice is a molded, long waisted one, having a gracefully shaped line across the front.

Black silk crêpe with an asparagus shade of green, brown with turquoise blue, and parrot green chiffon, with the collar of the dress material would be lovely. Chiffon, shantung, tub silk and crêpe de chine are lovely materials for this design. If you are planning for a trip next month you won't make any mistake in using wool crêpe for this design.

Ancient Path to Beauty

By Antoinette Donnelly

The Water Route Is a Tried and True Way to Loveliness for Women

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—Today you are going to be offered a very, very old beauty and health improver. Unfortunately it does not come in stunning containers with which the toilette table may be decorated. Neither has it the stamp of an Egyptian siren nor one of our own fair conquerors, the latter unhappily due to the fact that no one thought to ask for it an endorsement of the women who have made or are making beauty history for themselves.

Its name, too, bears a familiarity that may be interpreted as something against it. It is WATER. Not perfumed water; not spa water—just water. Water that runs out of a faucet for drinking purposes or bathing purposes. Of course you may include any good table water, if you are persuaded in favor of one of them.

I don't know why I should suffer a slight sinking sensation when I begin a talk on the beauty advantages of water. I should be better supported by the evidence gathered on the subject. But I "know my wimmin" and I know how they love their beauty lotions done up in fancy containers and labeled with a bit of mystery. And water you just can't attach any mystery to.

A Hundred Uses.

Yet here are just a few of the health and beauty advantages that may be gathered from an ample water drinking appetite. Let's take perspiration odors first, because it is always an unpleasant topic and we can get it out of the way quickly. Because, too, we are in a season in which it is likely to be most provocative. Of the external use of water to put the quietus on any possible blasting of lovely woman reputations we are fully conversant. But of the advantages of water taken internally to reduce the danger to a minimum most people are not so conversant. Yet copious water drinking is advocated by our best authorities for this distressing systemic condition.

Along with perspiration odors, because they are invariably associated with this other thing, also an unpopular topic but a vitally important one in beauty searches, is the self-poisoning with which so many beauty and other ills are identified. The rising flood of toxins with which the blood stream is polluted is something that may be treated with remarkable effectiveness by none other than the water cure. The whole excretory system functions more freely and efficiently on water power. For the kidneys, drink water. For the digestive tract drink water. And for better colonic irrigation, drink water. For the complexion, drink water. For the breath, drink water. For the eyes, drink it; and for better hair, imbibe freely. It is the great dissolver of waste, stagnating in the tissues. If you are a cigaret smoker, drink water. One of the damages done by the excessive tobacco consumer is drying up the saliva.

Mild skin eruptions are often remedied by a water drinking diet which, in turn, rids the blood of poisons. The complexion tone is quite obviously improved and the color in the eye affected for the better with a good internal flushing. You can even overcome attacks of the blues with the water flushing process. Drowsiness, heaviness, a lethargic state of mind and body can be made over into what it should be by making the excretory system function regularly and efficiently.

A Cheap Beauty Aid.

If it weren't that foods contain the quantity of water they do, we would shrivel up into old men and women earlier than we do. But nature has been good enough to provide a water percentage in most food items. Nature provided wells and springs, too, knowing that the water intake with food was not enough to preserve the fluid equilibrium of the body. There is a constant throwing off of the water consumed with foods, through the skin, the lungs and kidneys. That natural elimination has to be fortified with more water. If it does not get sufficient to supply the demand of the blood and other tissues, the blood will get it from some source, from the waste-laden colon, from which it will absorb along with the water foul poisons from the food waiting to be discharged by the bowels.

The great value to be had out of a two or three weeks' stay at a spa, abroad or here, is the prescribed route of water drinking and its direct flushing and cleaning of the system. The voyage to get to one of these places helps and the "atmosphere" is rejuvenating, as any change is, but what actually contributes to that feeling of a new joy in living is subscribed by the cleaner internal person the individual has become.

We can't say that all persons troubled with constipation, for instance, will be cured completely by water drinking. Chronic sufferers may well have to submit to other procedures. Nevertheless, the great internal cleanser is this most common and cheapest of all health and beauty products.

For a temperate group, women have a notorious reputation as water abstainers. O, they'll drink when they're thirsty. But to put themselves on systematic doses of so many glasses a day is difficult for them to do and women, curiously enough, need it more than men. Aside from the straight health need of water, there is the beauty concern that should supply the impetus to woman to take to drinking it. It's no closed secret what a system surcharged with poisons does to the hair, the eyes, the complexion. It's a dull woman who will not recognize the "skin toning" value in at least six glasses of water per day.

Drink It with Meals.

The myth of water being harmful with meals is now well dispelled by scientific proof. However, the recommendation is that water be taken only at the end of a meal, so that the temptation to gulp down food with it is eliminated.

The practice recommended is to take a glass on arising. Do this without fail. Take one between meals and what you can agreeably consume at the end of each meal. More important than the number of glasses a day is the distinct understanding that the whole system needs to be watered and flushed daily and that if you fail to be decently fair to your thirsty system, it will get even in a way no woman wants to be punished by—by a definite beauty loss.

Mercolized Wax Keeps Skin Young

DO you know that just beneath that soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon? Nature causes the normal skin to peel off in tiny, unseen, flour-like particles, a little each day, renewing the complexion of youth naturally, but there comes a time when this skin shedding slows up. Worry, overwork, sickness, inactivity are reasons that cause the face to be blotchy, discolored, pimply and old looking. The thing to do, if you wish to look your prettiest at all times, is to assist nature in the process of absorption by using pure Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce at any drug store or beauty counter and use as directed. It gently but surely peels away the outer scarf skin, removing freckles, pimples, blackheads or a muddy complexion. The underneath skin, now in evidence, is clear, pink, fresh and velvety, and the entire face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty. To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines we recommend a face lotion of unusual merit. One ounce powdered saxolite and one-half pint witch hazel.

The Tribune Cook Book

By Meta Given

Today, the Best Jellies—Crystal Clear, Quivering but Firm—Result from Following the Rules Laid Down by Our Grandmothers.

A leaflet giving interesting and helpful information on canning vegetables and fruits will be sent by Miss Given on receipt of a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

META GIVEN.

THERE are a good many household tasks that are done better today than ever before, but a few are still being done as our skillful grandmothers did them and not a whit better. Jelly making is one that we seem unable to improve upon. With but a superficial knowledge of the real composition of fruit juice or why fruit juice jellied, the housekeepers of long ago patiently worked out the proportion of sugar and juice that would produce the best jelly in each fruit. The food chemists of today know the whys and wherefores of jelly making, but their method of doing it does not excel grandmother's.

Grandmother not only learned how to obtain the most excellent fruit juice and the best proportions of sugar to use with each fruit juice but she also discovered which fruits were most suitable for jelly making. She found that juice could not be squeezed out of fruit and produce a clear jelly. Her way of straining juice through a close meshed white flannel bag to obtain a clear product is still used by experts. Experience taught her to boil the juice and sugar as rapidly as possible. With practice she learned how to determine when the juice and sugar had been cooked to the jellying point. The test she used when sirup would sheet from the spoon two drops at a time [see illustration]—is still employed by the best of jelly makers.

Jellies Clear as Crystal.

Her jellies were beautiful—clear as crystal and of a natural fruit color. They were tender, quivery but firm enough to stand alone when unmolded. Neither did they "weep" [when liquid oozes out of unmolded jelly on standing it is said to weep], nor were they sticky enough to follow the knife or spoon when cut.

N. E. Goldwaithe, Ph. D., in a bulletin published several years ago by the University of Illinois, says: "Ideal fruit jelly is a beautifully colored, transparent, palatable product obtained by so treating fruit juice that the resulting mass will quiver, not flow, when removed from a mold; a product with a texture so tender that it cuts easily with a spoon and yet so firm that the angles thus produced retain their shape; a clear product that is neither sirupy, gummy, sticky nor tough. Neither is it brittle and yet it will break, and does this with a distinct, beautiful cleavage which leaves sparkling characteristic faces. This is that delicious, appetizing substance—a good fruit jelly."

These are the standards by which we judge jelly. We could have applied them twenty-five years ago and the best of jelly made then would have scored just as high as the best made now.

Desire Old Fashioned Sweets.

Provident housekeepers are as interested today in making jelly as ever before. This last week we had a request by telephone for our method of making mint jelly and for a good old fashioned watermelon pickle recipe. This housewife said, "I was recently married and I want to learn how to make some of the delicious old fashioned jellies and preserves. My husband and I yearn for some of the things like mother used to make. We bought a watermelon yesterday and I have all of this lovely rind and would like to use it to make something good."

Wise is the woman who is determined to make things as good or better than mother. She is on the road to success as an efficient house manager. Her skill and economy should not only be appreciated but also emulated.

Sugar is now selling the lowest in years and up until the present time this season's fruits have been inexpensive. If one will follow a few rules and work with care any one can prepare perfect jellies.

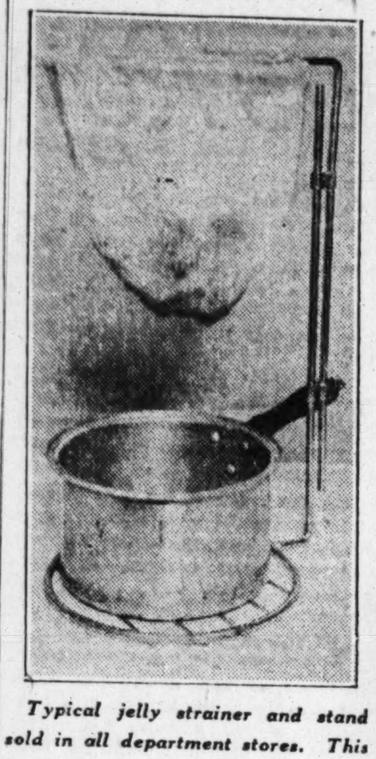
Choosing the Fruit.

Select firm, well grown but not overripe fruit. Blackberries and red raspberries that are a little underripe are best for jelly. Apples, crabapples, currants, partly ripe grapes and underripe raspberries are the best fruits for jelly. Cherries, strawberries, peaches, pears, and pineapples do not make good jelly when used alone. Currant or apple juice may be used with equal parts of black raspberry juice, pineapple, peach, strawberry, and blueberry juice to make very successful jelly.

General Directions for Making Jelly.

Fruit should always be gone over carefully for imperfections. Stems and blossom ends should be removed. Large fruits should be cut up. Leave berries, cherries, and currants whole.

Cook juicy fruits in a small amount of water—one cup water to one quart fruit. Barely cover fruits, such as apples, peaches, and quince, with water. Cook all fruits until just tender. Turn into a jelly bag (a Canton flannel one is good) and allow juice to drip through (see illustration). Do not squeeze bag. Juice that is squeezed out gives a cloudy jelly. Lacking a jelly bag a yard of Canton flannel washed and scalded may be spread over a colander set down in an earthen bowl. After the fruit is poured into the cloth, gather cloth in hands above the fruit, tie a string around the gathers and hang the bag over the bowl



Typical jelly strainer and stand sold in all department stores. This bag is made of cheese cloth and is too thin to obtain the clear juice that is necessary in the making of crystal clear jelly. We insert in this bag another made of Canton flannel. The result is an exceptionally clear juice.

from the pulp, or if more jelly is desired, return pulp to kettle, cover with water and simmer for thirty minutes. Turn into a jelly bag and allow it to drip without squeezing. Keep juice separate for first extraction. If you are not experienced in jelly making, test for pectin before adding sugar.

Testing the Fruit Juice.

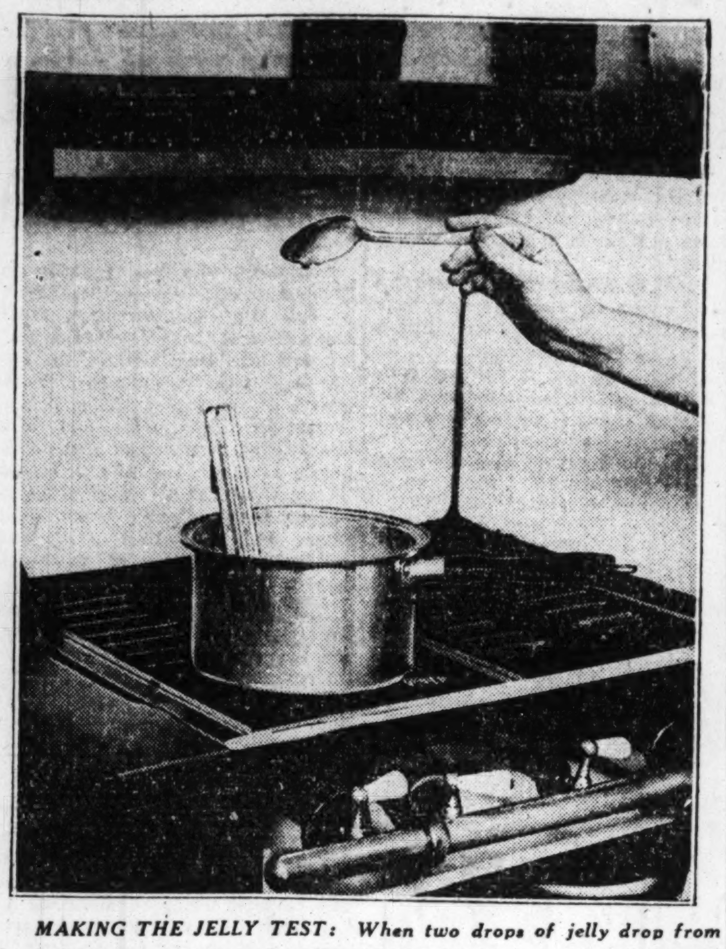
Fruit juice is composed largely of water holding in solution flavoring bodies, sugar, vegetable acid, and a substance called pectin which is important for jelly making. If pectin is present in a considerable quantity the juice may be made into jelly. If it is lacking it is impossible to transform the juice into jelly. Apple, crabapple, currant, and grape juice, which contain the most pectin, may be combined with juices containing little pectin to make satisfactory jelly.

The quantity of acid present also has a bearing on the jellying qualities of the juice. Sour apples, currants, which are notably sour, and slightly unripe grapes are almost sure to yield choice jelly. If failure results it is usually due to the proportion of sugar employed. A given volume of juice contains a certain quantity of pectin in solution and this quantity of pectin will take care of only a definite proportion of sugar. To make perfect jelly each and every time we must know how much pectin is present in the juice and also how much sugar that quantity of pectin can utilize.

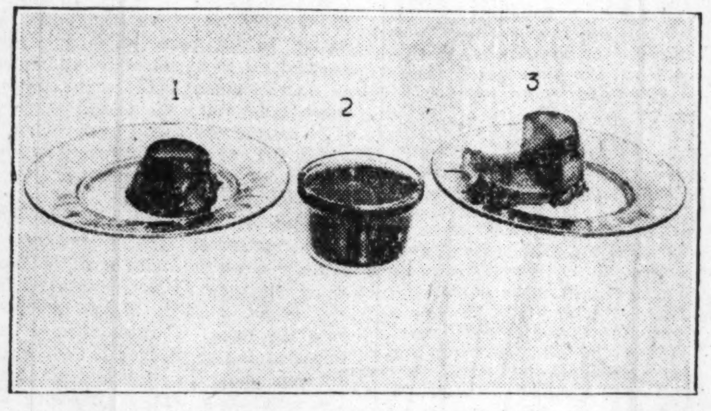
The presence of pectin in juice can be determined by mixing equal volumes of juice and wood alcohol. If a large amount of pectin is present a gelatinous mass will appear in the liquid which may be gathered up with a spoon. If a small amount is present it will collect in small, flaky particles. (Wood alcohol is poisonous and one must use it with the greatest care. After making the test for pectin throw the tested material away. Do not taste it.)

Amount of Sugar to Add.

Many failures are probably due to the use of too much sugar. Practically the only fruit juices that require an equal measure of sugar are currants, grapes, green gooseberries, bar berries, and wild crabapples—those fruits that contain a large amount of pectin and acid. Two-thirds as much sugar as fruit juice is a good proportion for most all other fruits and fruit combinations.



MAKING THE JELLY TEST: When two drops of jelly drop from the spoon at the same time the jelly is done. The temperature of the jelly at this stage is 219 degrees Fahrenheit for currant jelly and 220 for apple jelly.



1. Currant jelly beautifully clear and so tender that it just holds its shape when turned from the mold.

2. An ideal type of jelly glass of the right height. Unmolded jelly from a low glass three inches in diameter stands up better than jelly from a taller receptacle.

3. Ideal apple jelly. Note how the jelly retains its angles when cut. Clearness, tenderness, yet a sufficient firmness to retain angles are qualities of perfect jelly.

Jelly should always be made in small quantities and cooked in a large pan to allow vigorous boiling. Heat juice to the boiling point. Add sugar and boil rapidly to the jellying stage, testing for the two drops or with a thermometer.

Storing the Jelly.

Bacteria, yeasts and molds that attack fruit do not thrive and multiply in a heavy sugar solution like jelly. The finished product, however, should be stored in sterilized glass jars or tumblers. When cold cover with melted paraffin. When paraffin is cold, tie paper over top of glasses to exclude dust.

Freshly made jelly is much better than jelly that is months old. Therefore as each fruit comes into season, it is a good plan to make the juice and store it boiling hot in glass jars [can it as any fruit]. Later in the season, when the weather is cooler, make jelly as it is desired.

Apple juice may be added to raspberry, strawberry, blackberry, cherry, or plum juice to make these more expensive fruits produce more jelly. One-third raspberry and two-thirds apple gives a jelly of strong raspberry flavor.

Blueberry Jelly.

Cut a large lemon in very thin slices. Let stand over night in cold water to cover. Add the lemon and water to three quarts of blueberries. Cook and strain as described in general directions. Add two-thirds as much sugar as juice and cook to proper stage [when two drops sheets from spoon or 219° F.].

Apple Mint Jelly.

Cut apples in quarters, removing imperfections. Barely cover with boiling water. Put on cover and let cook, undisturbed until soft throughout. Turn into a bag to drain. Set juice over fire with the crushed leaves and stalks from a bunch of mint. Let cook 20 minutes. Strain, tint delicately with green color paste. Add sugar [3 cups to a quart of juice] and cook until it jellies [220° F.]. Pour into sterilized glasses.

Loyalty to Children

By Gladys Huntington Bevans

Stand by Your Boys and Girls as a Captain Stands by His Ship, No Matter What Happens.

WE hear lots of talk about loyalty. By various people we are told: Be loyal to your fraternity. Be loyal to your country. Be loyal to your employer. Be loyal to your political party. Be loyal to your parents. Be loyal to your friends. Be loyal to your ideals. All of which is good advice.

Loyalty is one of the qualities that make life worth living. But sometimes I think there's a loyalty that's skipped too often. We, who give so many things to our children—love, care, understanding—sometimes are not loyal to them.

Many people who have the highest sense of loyalty toward their friends and relatives, who would stick to them through thick and thin, through money troubles or disgrace, will fail in loyalty toward their children. And I mean both their little and their big children.

To start with the more dramatic examples, there's the father who will turn his daughter out of the house because she has made what is usually referred to as a "mistake." Or who will disinherit and close his doors to a son who gets himself expelled from college or who forges a check. This is the height of disloyalty, though those parents don't see it that way. It doesn't matter much whether the fault is the parent's because he has spoiled his child, or whether it's a chain of unfortunate circumstances that is responsible. In either case the father's loyalty is the child's due. How can those children expect much of the world at large, if their own parents won't stand by them?

This is the time when loyalty that [illegible] shows up. It isn't easy loyalty that means much. It's the hard loyalty that counts.

Standing By.

Of course, loyalty doesn't mean making soft excuses to your child for himself. It means standing by—helping in a wholesome way—but standing by wholeheartedly in the unswerving way that a captain stands by a ship. No matter what happens on the ship, what condition it's in, it's his great responsibility and he stands by it. And this standing by is his desire as well as his duty, because love of his ship as well as a sense of responsibility enters in. A parent's loyalty should be something like that.

To go on with other instances less theatrical—there are the times when your child fails in examinations, or in promotion, or in making a school speech, or in his or her part in a play, or a contest, or a spelling bee. Do you make your daughter or son feel you're ashamed of either of them at those times? Or do you, especially in public, before friends or teachers, regardless of your feelings, put up a good front and support them, with a smile or an encouraging word, making them feel you're always on their side in the face of the world? That's loyalty.

There are other things that show your loyalty. There are the times when the younger children need reproof—and the older ones, too, for that matter. Do you try to correct them or discipline them when no outsiders are around? That's loyalty.

There are many, many other ways in which your loyalty can be active. For instance, when a grown person comes to you with a tale of something your child has done, do you immediately accept that story as fact, and act accordingly? Or do you examine into the matter, talk with your child privately and either believe him or give him the benefit of every possible doubt? And if it is necessary to do something to impress him or make him understand his error, do you do that away from the public gaze? That is loyalty.

Start Early.

You can't begin too early to be loyal to your children. When they're scarcely past babyhood there are many occasions when socially some adult's sense of dignity is outraged or possessions unintentionally injured—and you sense that the only thing that would assuage the adult's injured feelings is a "good spanking," or a severe scolding. Do you calmly—or otherwise—refrain from catering to such a situation? That's loyalty. You may be embarrassed over the incident or sincerely regretful, and express it fervently to your hostess or guest. But don't go back on the baby or little child. That is disloyalty. Disloyalty at such a time is most disturbing to him.

To refrain from discussing your child's faults and failings with casual people is one more form of loyalty. And especially to refrain from doing it in his or her presence. Naturally, this doesn't preclude serious talks with real friends about difficulties your children present.

To avoid criticizing your child's hair or clothes or posture or manners in public, is another form of loyalty. Of course that doesn't mean you'll never say a single word about the length of a skirt of the choice of a dress or the color of a pair of trousers—or the color of a pair of elbows! But it does mean that to be loyal you'll never be so critical as to make your children feel you're on the side of the opposition.

These are only a few of the loyalties that may exist toward a child. There are countless other opportunities to be loyal and you will recognize them as they come along.

Loyalty is a beautiful thing. And rest assured that if your child is conscious you are loyal to him he will in his turn be loyal to you.

Running Through the Woods

Maud Miller Hallmaster

By Eleanor Jewett

Running through the woods,
Little things call—
Over fallen pine trees
Little things crawl.

When I run I hear them
Running far behind—
Should I be afraid of them?
They may be kind.

Running through the woods
Weaves a magic spell—
Would the echoes catch me
If I stubbed my toe and fell?

Bright Sayings

Please address all bright sayings of children to Aunty Bee, The Tribune.

Last Saturday I made a pair of apple pies. To Bobby and David I gave bits of left over dough, which they slapped and rolled into nearly round discs called "cookies." They put them in a pan, and before I placed them in the oven, I asked: "How are you going to tell which is which?"

Looking them over carefully, Bobby answered: "O, I guess we'll just have to remember that mine is the cleanest!" J. M.

ONCE IN A WIFETIME

by Octavus Roy Cohen

Henpecked Johnny Skidd, Down from Harlem, Found Strict Attendance upon His Shrewish Wife Irksome, but That a Friendly Game of Dice Could Prove Too Adventurous.

IT pleased Johnny Skidd to press the button on his desk and have a pulchritudinous secretary answer the summons. This procedure invariably gave him a thrill. That he—the human negative—should have the power to summon another person by the mere pressure of a finger was a never ending source of wonderment.

As the damsel settled herself with stenographic pad and pencil, Johnny took a swift and prideful glance at the ground glass door of the outer office. It proclaimed to the world that this was the sanctum of Mr. Skidd and that he was a supervisor for the Midnight Pictures Corporation, Inc.

Perhaps the sign was merciful. Certainly, one glimpsing Johnny for the first time would never become suspicious that he possessed executive ability—and Johnny himself would have been the first to deny any such accusation.

It was all a miracle to the shy little man from Harlem, and what was even more remarkable than his success was the unmistakable fact that he was enormously popular on the lot. From President Orifice R. Latimer down to Gateman Percy Wattles, they loved him. He was eagerly friendly and not at all uppity. Besides, he used his exalted position only for the purpose of agreeing with whatever suggestions happened to be made by actors, directors and technical experts. He was the world's champion yes-man . . . and that through no weakness, but because he was a gullible and enthusiastic soul who saw naught but good in the world.

The secretary looked up at her boss.

"You want to dictate a letter, Mistuh Skidd?"

Johnny sighed. "I don't want to, but I guess I better on account I give you all the trouble of comin' in heah."

She held the pencil poised.

"Who to?"

"I dunno——" He seemed somewhat bewildered. "Couldn't you git suggestive?"

A Swell Time Planned.

"Mmm! How about writin' Director Edwin Boscoe Fizz 'bout how good you thought his last pitcher was?"

"Hot dawg! Tha's a fine idea." His brow became corrugated by the pangs of composition. "Take this down: 'Dean friend Eddie—That was a swell pitcher you made and I know your next one will be sweller. Tell him I think he is a fine feller and why don't he drop into the office to see me some time. Yours respectively, Johnny Skidd.'"

The stenographer smiled and rose. "Will that be all?"

"Uh-huh. Leastways until I git another itch to press that buzzer."

The outer door opened and a large figure lunged inside. The secretary made way for Opus Randall, portly leading man, as Johnny came forward with hand outstretched.

"If it ain't Brother Randall!" he enthused. "Honest, Opus—you is the most feller I was cravin' to see."

Mr. Randall dropped informally into a chair. He was a person of vast dimensions and sartorial elegance, and his eyes dwelt upon the diminutive supervisor with genuine affection.

"Johnny," he announced, "we is gwine have a great time."

"Who is?"

"You an' me an' Welford Potts an' Florian Slappey an' J. Caesar Clump an' lots of others."

"Doin' what?"

"Playin' poker."

A spasm of pain crossed Johnny's countenance. "Don't go makin' me sadder than what I a'ready is, Opus. You know good an' well I caint play no poker."

"But you tol' me you loved the game."

"I do. It's the craziest game I is about. But lovin' it an' playin' it is horses of two other colors."

"Scared of Yo' Wife!"

Mr. Randall pleaded. "This is diff'ent, Johnny. Friday is Lawyer Evans Chew's birthday an' his wife is th'owin' a big party fo' him. All the best players in town is gwine be there an' we is gwine play stud all evenin'. Besides that, I seen Mis' Chew buyin' two hams which she is gwine cook herse'f—an' Johnny, until you has et one of her own cooked hams you ain't never had no succulence between them lips of your'n."

"I caint go," gloomed Johnny.

"You got to. Ev'ybody says the party won't be no fun less'n you is there."

Mr. Skidd rose. His manner was almost positive.

"Don't argufy, Opus. I know which side my bread is toasted on."

"But," insisted Mr. Randall: "How come?"

"You know dawg-gone good an' well it's on account of my wife."

"O!" murmured the actor with somewhat insulting emphasis: "Her!"

"Yeh—her. She won't never leave me to go nowhere to have a good time."

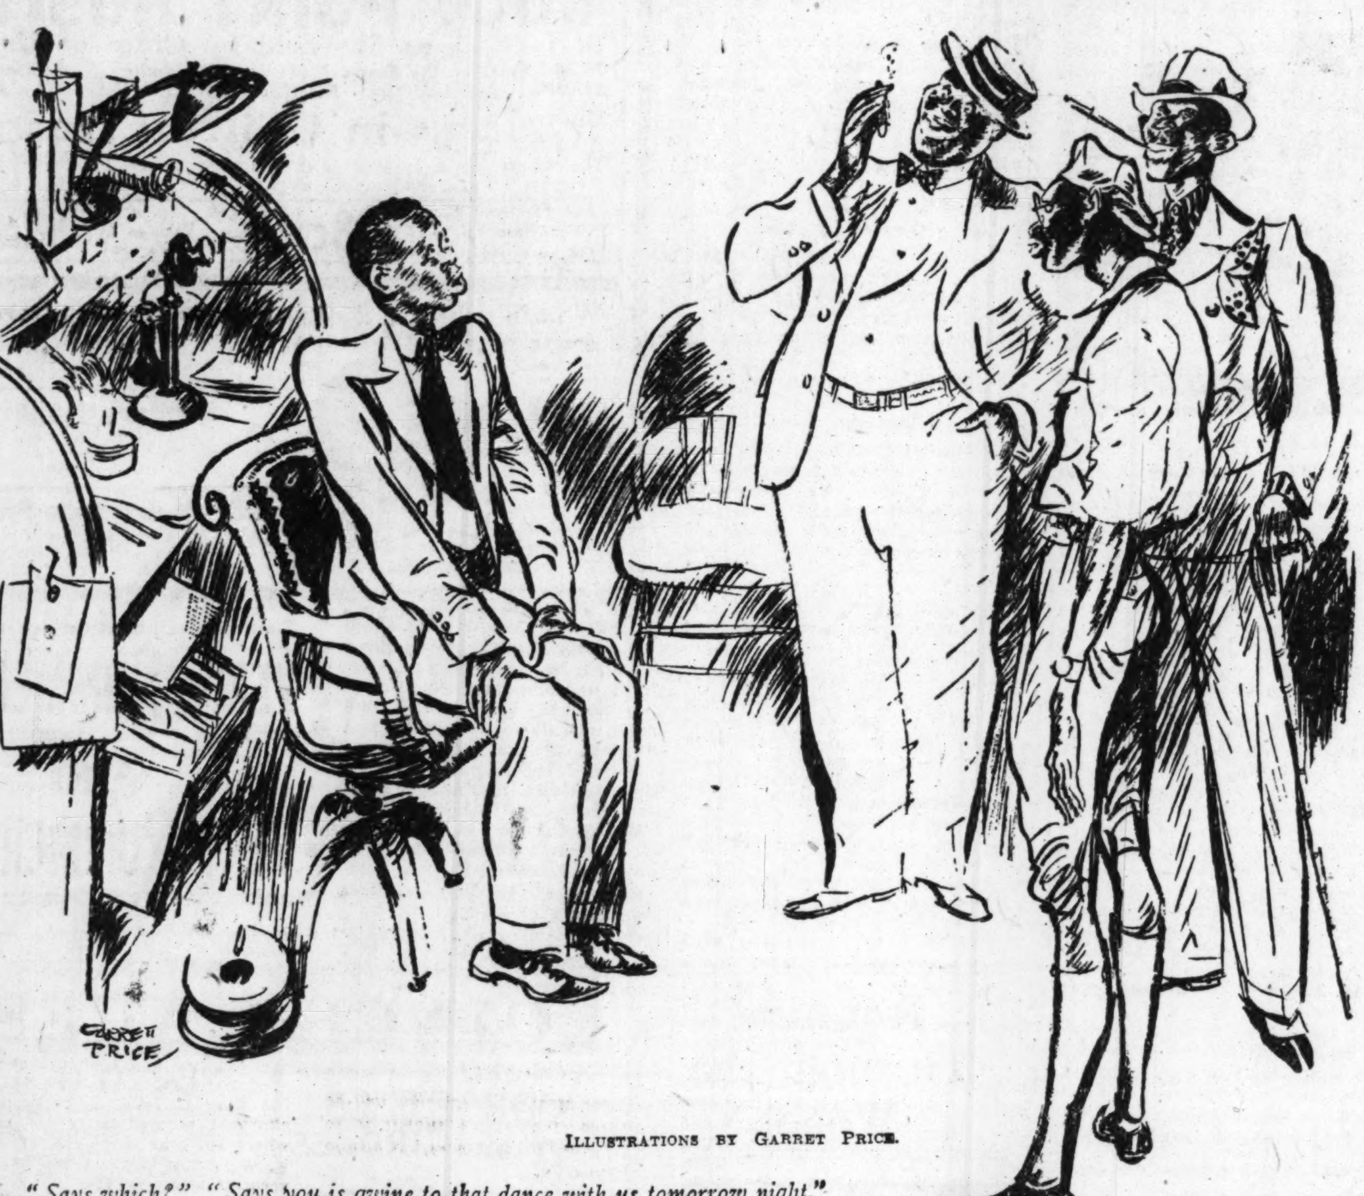
"Take the mule by the horns," suggested Opus, "an' just tell her you is gwine."

Mr. Skidd shook his head pityingly. "I see by them remark, Opus, that you ain't ve'y well 'quainted with Garnish."

"Shuh! Scared of yo' wife!"

"You is mighty tootin' I is."

"But Garnish ain't even reasonable. She never lets you go nowhere or have no good time."



ILLUSTRATIONS BY GARRET PRICE.

"Says which?" "Says you is gwine to that dance with us tomorrow night."

"Don't I know it? But she hates Bumminham an' just nachelly ain't willin' to try an' be happy heah. Besides, she ain't got ary friend in the town."

"Why not?"

"'Cause when my pa—which is the biggest stockholder in Midnight—sent me down heah fo' a job an' they made me a supervisor, she thought I was gwine make a mess of it, and right away we would move back to New Yawk. So when the social committee fum the Sons and Daughters of I Will Arise called on her she dictied 'em all over the place."

"What you mean 'dicty'?"

"Tha's Harlem fo' what the white folks call ritzy. Also, later a lot of the socially eclair in Bumminham come to see her an' she adwised 'em where to step to."

"Where was that?"

"If you had much brains, Opus, you could figger out. Well, anyway, I sort of lucked along down heah, an' now when she is willin' to be friends with folks the wimmin is all keepin' away fum her."

"Right!" agreed Opus. "Bumminham cullud ladies is pow'ful pridish."

"You see, it's thisaway," pursued Johnny. "It's kind of et on Garnish. Just 'cause she cain't have no good time she preten's like she don't want none. 'Cept fo' goin' shoppin' alone once in awhile, she just sits aroun' all day an' be's mis'able. An' at night she takes it out on me."

"Whyn't you git a divorce away fum her?"

"'Cause I'se crazy 'bout her, tha's why."

"Crazy is right!" agreed Mr. Randall fervently.

It's Kind of Tough.

"Well, a feller cain't he'p it if he's fond of a lady who happens to be his own wife, can he? I reckon I know that Garnish ain't soft an' sweet an' gentle, but she's the on'iest wife I got, an' even if she does gimme hell all the time she sho' depreciates me."

"Yah! Ain't she always sayin' you is dumb?"

"Well—ain't I?"

"Nossuh! You is a genus. You is the best supervisor we got."

"I'se the on'y one."

"Just the same you is the best. An' ev'ybody on the lot is foolish 'bout you. I reckon there ain't no other person workin' fo' Midnight which ev'ybody likes, an' we is all sad on account you cain't never go nowhere with us. Always we invite you places, an' always you cain't go 'cause that wife of your'n won't let you. Sometimes I wish she could happen to a bad accident."

Johnny shook his head. "It is kind of tough," he admitted. "An' I ain't sayin' that I woul'n't like to git out with the boys once in awhile. But it ain't noways possible."

"Golla—an' all the fun you is missin'. Tomorrow night is a big dance at the Sons and Daughters of I Will Arise."

"I love dancin'."

"An' the next night we is havin' a dice game on the lot."

Johnny made a clucking noise.

"Shootin' dice is the fondest sport I is of."

"An' the next night is Lawyer Chew's poker party. Always we testivates, an' never can you join us. Was you just an ordinary feller we woul'n't mind, but it makes us kind of sick thinkin' of you always sittin' in them hotel rooms gittin' rowed at by that wife of your'n."

Again Mr. Skidd's chest expansion gave evidence of a sigh.

"Cain't be he'ped, Opus. Minute that 'ooman thinks I is gwine have a good time without her she arranges things so I has instead a bad time with her."

Mr. Randall's eyes narrowed. "S'posin' she didn't know that you was gwine to a party? S'posin' you could fool her?"

"Quit talkin' craziment. I never could fool that gal."

"No? But if I schum a swell scheme?"

Johnny was keenly interested. "Woul'n't she find out?"

"Not a chance. Not even if you was to go to the dance tomorrow night. An' tha's 'cause she ain't got no friends who would tell her about it."

Mr. Skidd considered the matter. "I love my wife too much to do what she don't want, Opus. But I ain't got any objections to foolin' her."

"Hot ziggity dam!"

"On'y remember this: Any scheme you git has got to be perfect."

"I reelize that. I'll be back in one hour. I crave to see what sort of ideas I can git fum Caesar Clump and Florian Slappey an' some of them smart fellers."

Opus stamped from the office and the skinny little supervisor settled into a hopeful fog.

"Yo' Problem Is Solved."

He loved Birmingham. In New York he had been an amoeba. Here he was a person of importance. And it was an ironic twist of fate that when success and recognition and popularity came to him it was under circumstances which precluded his enjoyment of the social rewards thereof.

Of course Garnish was impossible. She ruled him with an iron hand, and each evening was spent by him listening to her harsh voice proclaiming that she hated Birmingham and always would despise it. His best and most logical arguments failed to shake her antipathy to the Alabama metropolis—nor did his pleading win for him even one additional hour of liberty.

Less than one hour later Opus Randall returned. Trailing him were two slender gentlemen. Florian Slappey was, as usual, resplendent; J. Caesar Clump wore the conventional directorial habiliments: white silk shirt open at the throat, cap turned backwards, tan putters, and black shoes. All were grinning and Opus acted as spokesman.

"Johnny," he declared proudly, "yo' problem has been soluted."

"Says which?"

"Says you is gwine to that dance with us tomorrow night. An' the evenin' after that we rolls the bones on sound stage No. 2. Follerin' night us plays stud at Lawyer Chew's house."

"What you mean: Us?"

"I mean you an' we."

"Foolishment you talk!"

"'Tain't foolishment. An' to prove it leave me straduce you to Julius Caesar Clump, chief of production fo' Midnight Pitchers Corporation, Inc."

Caesar chuckled. "It's a cinch, Johnny. Tomorrow night us starts makin' a new pitcher."

Mr. Skidd's face fell. "Dawg-bite the luck. Then none of us cain't do none of them pleasant things."

"Sho'ly we can, 'cause we ain't gwine make no pitcher. On'y you tell Garnish that we is, an' she cain't keep you away fum yo' supervisin', which you gits paid fo'."

The idea percolated, and Johnny's lips expanded into a grin.

"You mean I is to tell Garnish that I got to work at night in the studjo fo' th'ee nights?"

"That's the one thing we don't mean nothin' else but. An' after this whenever you want to go out you can use the same excuse."

Mr. Skidd rose excitedly. "I'm goin' home," he declared, "to break the news right away to Garnish."

Birmingham sweltered under a midsummer sun, but Mr. Skidd's enthusiasm was not affected by the intense heat. He flipped his coat over his left arm, carried his hat in his right hand, and went whistling toward Darktown and Sally Crouch's Cozy Home Hotel for Colored. Several persons recognized him and spoke in friendly fashion, which caused Johnny's heart to expand with happiness. In Harlem one might walk for miles and never see a familiar face. Here one numbered friends by the score after a few months of residence. He wished most devoutly that something—anything—might occur to alter Garnish's intransigent antagonism to Birmingham and all that was Birmingham's.

He found her in negligée, seated at the window of their room staring unhappily down at the traffic which lazed through 18th street. She turned a somewhat sour countenance toward him.

Breaking the News.

"I hate this town, Johnny."

"I know. You has mentioned that fack lots of times."

"I wisht we was back in New Yawk."

He figured discretion the larger half of valor and did not enter into the old argument. Instead he shed collar and tie and stretched out in a rocker—mopping his forehead. She gazed intently at him.

"You is home early today."

"Uh-huh. An' likewise tomorrow."

"Reckon Midnight is discoverin' that you ain't such a hot supervisor."

"I reckon not. But I has got to start workin' nights tomorrow night, an'——"

She straightened. "What kind of words is them which you utters with yo' mouf?"

"Us is behime schedule," he explained with simulated calmness. "An' New Yawk is sending milliums of telegrams 'bout where is that new pitcher. So tomorrow night us commences shootin' on sound stage No. 2. Today an' tomorrow they is buildin' the sets an' wirin' 'em so's we can finish the pitcher in th'ee nights."

"You—you mean," she inquired in horror, "that you is goin' out an' leave me all alone?"

"Yassum."

"Why, you low down, mismatched, ornery, slab sided, tripe eatin' hunk of nothin'. You ain't got——"

"That's it, honey. I ain't got nothin' to do but ack like President Latimer suggesses. An' when he says we got to work mos' all night fo' th'ee nights I is forced to say yes." His voice dropped to an ingratiating murmur. "Don't you know I'd a heap rather sit heah in the room with you?"

"No!"

"Injustice you does me."

"Maybe so. But I ain't never seen you look unhappy when you lef' me in the mawin', an' I don't see how come you should appear that way at night."

Patiently Johnny suffered through a draggy evening. Garnish's high, nasal voice whammed against his eardrums for hours as she expressed, for the millionth time her unflattering opinion of everything connected with Birmingham and the people who resided therein.

But she did not question the veracity of his story. The fact that Johnny would dare trick her never entered her mind. Always he had been humble and docile. She merely resented the added loneliness, never admitting that the hermit life she lived was entirely her own fault.

The whole Birmingham situation was a source of never ending amazement. In all their married life—before the trip south—Johnny Skidd had never exhibited the symptom of a brain. That he had managed to keep body and soul together was due (she believed) to the fact that his father was unusually well fixed financially. Yet, somehow, the idea was being driven home to her that Mr. Skidd was succeeding in a large way in Birmingham—and she hated that success because it added to her term of imprisonment in this city where she had, at first, refused to make friends—and now was shunned by those with whom she would have liked to become intimate.

Her days were interminable and lonely. Night afforded her only diversion, when she had the long suffering Johnny to listen to her troubles. Evening after evening she lashed him with her tongue, and waved over his head the rod of iron with which she ruled him. His negative personality was completely subjected to her indomitable will . . . yet, queerly enough, they were genuinely fond of one another. It was only a pity, reflected Johnny, that they could not display this mutual affection in some other way. He would have loved Garnish to be gentle, considerate and affectionate.

The next night Johnny and his wife ate an early supper. He presented her with a magazine containing many pictures, and expressed the hope that she would retire early. Then he hustled out to Florian Slappey's room in Sis Callie Flukers' boarding house on Avenue F, where Florian loaned him his second best dinner suit.

Gorgeously arrayed, they departed in a car which Florian had rented for the occasion and ten minutes later entered the lodge rooms of the Sons and Daughters of I Will Arise.

The place was a welter of color and gayety. On the embowered rostrum Prof. Aleck Champagne's Jazzphony orchestra was earnestly dispensing itchy music. On the floor more than a hundred couples were demonstrating the latest intricacies of the newest steps.

Everybody who was anybody in Birmingham colored society was there: Dr. and Mrs. Lijah Atcherson, President Orifice R. Latimer of Midnight; Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Gethers, the former being grand magnificent high potentate of the lodge; Dr. and Mrs. Brutus Herring, Lawyer and Mrs. Evans Chew, Director and Mrs. Edwin Boscoe Fizz, Mr. and Mrs. J. Caesar Clump, Opus Randall, Welford Potts, Callous Deech, Forcep Swain, Epic Peters, Jasper De Void . . . and an impressive group of unmarried damsels.

The place was banked with wild flowers, the music was plenty hot, and the light colored filmy gowns of the ladies were in sharp and delightful contrast to the severe dinner clothes worn by a majority of the men.

A Successful Party.

There was a shout of welcome as Johnny entered the room. The most important guests came forward personally to greet him. No mistaking his popularity. They loved his shy reticence, and now bent themselves to the task of seeing that he had a glorious time on this first night of emancipation.

At two o'clock in the morning the dance ended. At three Johnny had reverted to his palm beach suit and reached his room where he attempted to undress quietly. But a penetrating voice came from the bed.

"Thought you wasn't never comin'."

"But I was," he answered softly. "Ise heah right now, honey."

"Work hard?"

"Uh-huh. Ise plumb exhaustified."

She grunted and turned over. Johnny eased into bed and the next thing he knew he was awakened by the bright sunshine which streamed into the room. Garnish already had departed and he dragged himself wearily from under the sheet and set about the melancholy task of preparing his own breakfast.

At dinner that evening Garnish was in an atrocious humor. She did not relish the prospect of another evening alone. The preceding night had been her first experience without Johnny, and while she never did anything but quarrel with him—it was at least a relief to have some one to act as target for her verbal darts.

He assured her that he was faced by only two more nights of work. He described with a commendable display of imagination the progress made the night before on the picture they were supposed to be making.

"An' tonight," he remarked in Delphic fashion, "we is really gwine shoot."

Eight o'clock found him at the gate of the Midnight lot. The premises bulked dark and forbidding in the night. He stood for a moment chatting with Percy Wattles, the small but efficient gateman.

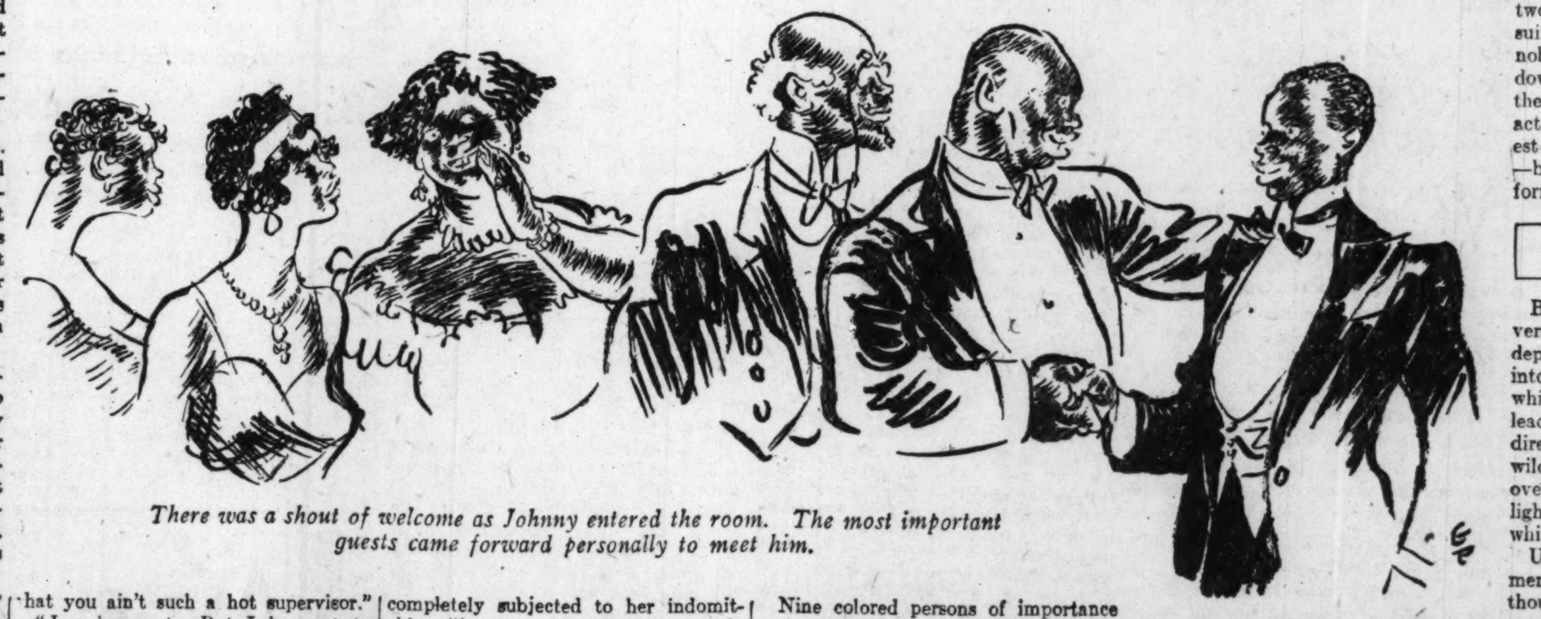
"Big dice game tonight," he remarked cheerfully.

"Yassuh, Mistuh Skidd. I has heard tell of such."

Johnny executed a shuffling dance step. "An' boy! Ise right. I feel like Ise just nachelly gwine produce much sevens."

"I hope so, Mistuh Skidd. I reckon you is the most feller on this lot nobody else woul'n't mind losin' to."

Johnny picked his way gingerly along a darkened alley between two elaborate sets. Only his familiarity with the lot enabled him to find his way to the gloomy, warehouse appearing sound stage where the festivities already had commenced. The whole lot was shrouded in gloom, and the very blackness imparted to Johnny a greater thrill of adventure.



There was a shout of welcome as Johnny entered the room. The most important guests came forward personally to meet him.

Nine colored persons of importance and affluence were there and they made the newcomer welcome. Johnny watched for a second, then grabbed the dice and flipped a two dollar bill on the floor.

"Hard luck bill," he pleaded, "work fo' yo' nachel papa. Shoot the two bucks, an'—wham! Eeeleven! Ride the fo', an' who is misfortunate enough to fade me? C'mon dices! Li'l Joe is my point. If I bucks you, Joe, I let the eight ride. Heah goes. Eighter fum Decatur. Two big box cars, too late fo' hurtment. An' now . . . a four! Ride the eight, an' who wants any mo' of my money. C'mon, cubicles! Hot dam! A seven! Shoot the sixteen." The dice rattled provocatively in his palm. "Sixty-six it is. Be sweet to yo' daddy. I want a fo'-two, but——" and his voice crescendoed with excitement, "but Ise willin' to take that double-three. Gemmun, I drag my thirty-two dollars an' pass them ivories. They caint stay hot all night."

Good luck rested on Johnny's banner, and no one seemed resentful. This was Johnny's party and they were glad to see him win. There were times when he lost, but he shot in canny fashion; pressing his luck just so far—and no farther. Everybody on stage two was having a good time.

But back at the Cozy Home hotel, Garnish Skidd was abysmally miserable. One night alone had been pretty bad, but this repetition was little short of unbearable.

She tried reading, but that brought little pleasure. She already had seen the best pictures at the colored houses. She wasn't at all interested in fancywork or sewing—and she missed Johnny.

An idea came to her. Why not while her time away at the Midnight lot where, at least, it would be interesting to watch the making of a talking two reeler? Garnish had visited the lot only once before and had been more impressed than she cared to admit by the massive sound stages, the noisy efficiency, and the enormous batteries of inkies which flashed at one from every angle.

She donned her hat and sallied forth. The Midnight lot was only half a dozen blocks away and she decided to walk. Each step served to raise her spirits. This indeed would be an interesting evening. She was almost glad that Johnny had been called upon for night work because this would break the tedium of merely sitting alone with her submissive husband.

Save for a single light which glimmered in sickly fashion over the heavy iron gate, the Midnight lot was shrouded in gloom. She rattled the latch and Percy Wattles emerged from his little sentry box and inquired her mission.

"Ise Mis' Johnny Skidd."

"Yassum." Percy made haste to open the gate, for Garnish's terrible reputation had preceded her. "Come right in, ma'am."

She stepped inside and stared uncertainly at the dark roadway which wound tortuously through outdoor sets toward the great, gloomy bulk of the sound stages.

"Where at is they shootin'?" she inquired.

"Stage No. 2, ma'am."

"It's awful dark. Caint you 'scawt me there?"

Percy shook his head. "Ise sorry, Mis' Skidd—but I got orders not to leave this gate no time fo' nothin'."

She stepped timidly into the darkness. The route was entirely unfamiliar. On the occasion of her only other visit to the lot, she had entered through the administration building and not through the gate.

Opus to the Rescue.

Meanwhile, Johnny had risen from the floor of stage No. 2 and inquired for a certain brand of cigaret, his being gone. Others were offered him, but he was afraid a change of brand in the middle of a game might alter his luck. Therefore he excused himself for a moment and walked out into the darkness en route to his private office in the directors building, where he maintained a plentiful stock.

Meanwhile, Percy Wattles was gazing after the determined figure of Mrs. Johnny Skidd who was progressing slowly toward the big warehouse looking building which did duty as a stage. He scratched his head reflectively.

"I wonder," he cogitated, "what Mis' Skidd meant when she ast was they shootin' on stage No. 2? I wonder does she know that what they is shootin' is dice?"

It occurred to him that he had better flash a warning. If Garnish knew a dice game was in progress, then no harm would be done. But if she thought her husband was working and found him earnestly exhorting fortune from ivory cubes—catastrophe would result.

Percy stepped into his watchman's box and dialed 31, which was the number of the phone on sound stage No 2. The bell sounded insistently, but the shooters paid it no heed. Only the enormous Opus Randall, who happened to be uninterested financially in the present shot, made a move to answer.

He dragged his excessive bulk across the floor and lifted the receiver. From the other end came the voice of Percy Wattles, speaking crisply.

"Seems like to me, Mistuh Randall," he finished, "that she sort of thought they was shootin' a pitcher, an' I figgered if that was the case she would git terrible sore."

"Sufferin' tripe!" groaned Opus as he snapped the receiver back on the hook.

Mr. Randall looked for Johnny, but that diminutive gentleman had vanished. Opus stepped into the gloom of the alleyway between stages one and two. He was genuinely fond of Mr. Skidd and shuddered to think what would occur to that misfortunate little man should Garnish make the ghastly discovery of his perfidy.

Unquestionably this was an emergency calling for swift and drastic action. No chance to go into executive session with oneself and at leisure determine the best policy. Either one must act with courageous definiteness or Johnny would be confronted with complete disaster.

The Kidnaping.

The immediate thing was to forestall Garnish's arrival at stage No. 2. The second move was to see that she did not remain on the lot. Seconds were valuable. There was no time to confer with the others. By the time he could explain the problem to them, Garnish Skidd would enter the stage and then all would be lost.

A desperately fantastic idea smote Mr. Randall right in the brain. At the initial impact, he shivered—then as he thought it over swiftly, a determined smile creased his lips and he decided to carry it through for the sake of his friend.

Given a half hour to consider results, Opus would have abandoned the scheme. But now—he barely had time to act on instinct . . . and he did that in a most thorough manner.

Swiftly he tied a handkerchief about the lower part of his face. Then he concealed himself in the gloom of the alley. And before he had a moment to reflect upon the sheer wildness of his Samaritanism, Garnish was upon him.

Nothing to do now but act, and Opus did that effectively. Uttering a large and terrifying "Whoooof!" he leaped out of the darkness and clapped one big hand over the lips of Garnish Skidd. From beneath the palm there came a gasp, and then Mrs. Skidd passed into the realm of the unconscious.

Delighted with the success of his strategem, Opus easily gathered the woman in his arms and strode with her to the garage. He leaped into his own car, placed Mrs. Skidd beside him, stepped on the starter, flung the car into gear, turned on the lights and flashed down the main thoroughfare of the lot. One blast from his horn and a popeyed Percy Wattles flung open the gate.

Opus was well pleased with himself, but he did not know of something which had occurred coincidently with his kidnaping of Mrs. Skidd.

Johnny had visited his office and obtained a supply of his favorite cigarets. Strolling happily across the lot, he had discerned a female figure which he recognized instantly as belonging to his wife.

Then, under his astonished eyes, something ghastly had happened. A masked man, who seemed about nine feet tall and seven feet broad, had leaped upon Garnish from the darkness, apparently strangled her, flung her into a car—and vanished through the main gate into the night. Unfortunately, Johnny did not know that as Opus shot past Percy Wattles, he leaned over the side of the car and identified himself to that little man.

In the veins of Mr. Skidd there flowed heroic blood. His beloved Garnish was being kidnaped. As sole witness of the drama it behooved him to effect a rescue. He longed for a few allies, but there was no time to call them. His immediate job was to keep the abduction car in sight.

Remembering that Florian Slappey had left his rented car unlocked, Johnny leaped into the garage and two seconds later went flashing in pursuit of Opus. Percy Wattles made a noble attempt to flag the little man down for purposes of explaining that the kidnaping was merely a friendly act, that Garnish was not in the slightest danger and that it was no bandit—but Opus Randall—who was performing the noble deed.

A Golden Opportunity.

But Johnny had no time for conversation. As he reached the gate he depressed the accelerator and shot into the night after the tiny red dot which marked the tail light of the leading car. The bandit was heading directly for Red mountain and the wild country beyond. Johnny huddled over the wheel, eyes riveted on the red light far in advance, summer breeze whipping into his face.

Up ahead, Mr. Randall was commencing to think—and the more he thought, the more disturbed he became. He was headed into the country, but he was beginning to wonder what he was going to do when Garnish regained consciousness, recognized her captor and began to yell. The prospect was not alluring.

Certainly she must not be permitted to notify the world in general that she was an abducted lady. Therefore he stopped his car by the side of the road, and took from under the seat several pieces of rope and an extra handkerchief. The handkerchief he slipped between her teeth and tied behind her head. With the rope he bound her hands and feet. During the entire operation he maintained the concealment afforded by the handkerchief which masked his own countenance.

In the rear, Johnny's heart gave a bound of delight when he noticed that the bandit's car had stopped. Then a terrible thought came to Mr. Skidd.

Here was his golden opportunity to rescue his wife—but how? The kidnaper was of colossal proportions and Johnny a mere shrimp of a man. One

Furniture of Merit

By Edith Weigle

This sofa is ideal for the small apartment.

It's Just as Easy to Furnish a Room in Good Taste as in Bad, and Tempting Pieces Make It a Joy to Have the Best

THERE'S no doubt about it, maple is as popular as a mint julep on a hot day, and not nearly so hard to find! The great demand for it has brought down its price considerably, too. I was astonished when I received a folder from a large department store in New York advertising a complete bedroom set of furniture in maple for less than a hundred dollars.

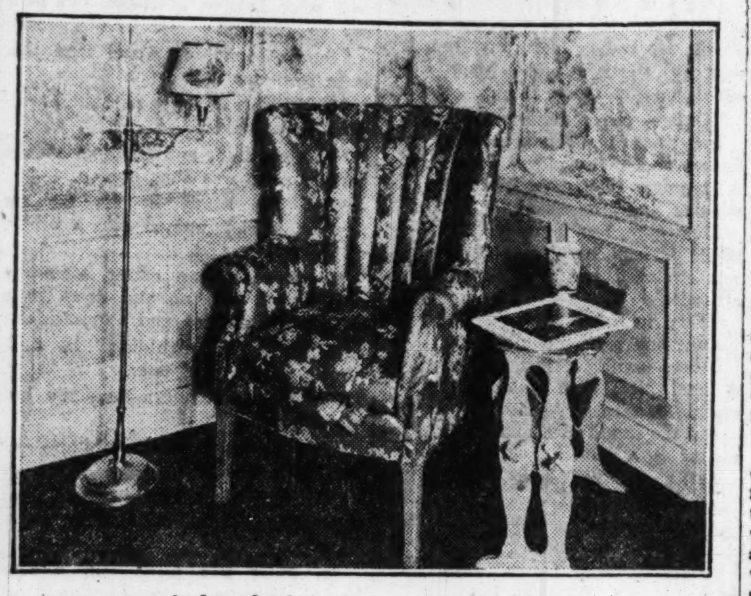
Under the charming picture showing the pieces in a most attractive room setting and the price for the group were the words: "Seems impossible, doesn't it?" For once one agrees entirely—it does. Especially when you realize that included in the ensemble are: A highboy, a bed, bedding, felt mattress, coil spring and pillow, a dressing table, a mirror, a bench, a night stand, and a slipper chair of chintz. The style is early American.

Chicago stores are doing the same remarkable things and are putting really lovely pieces within the reach of the most slender of purses. This is the great month for buying furniture at reduced prices, you know.

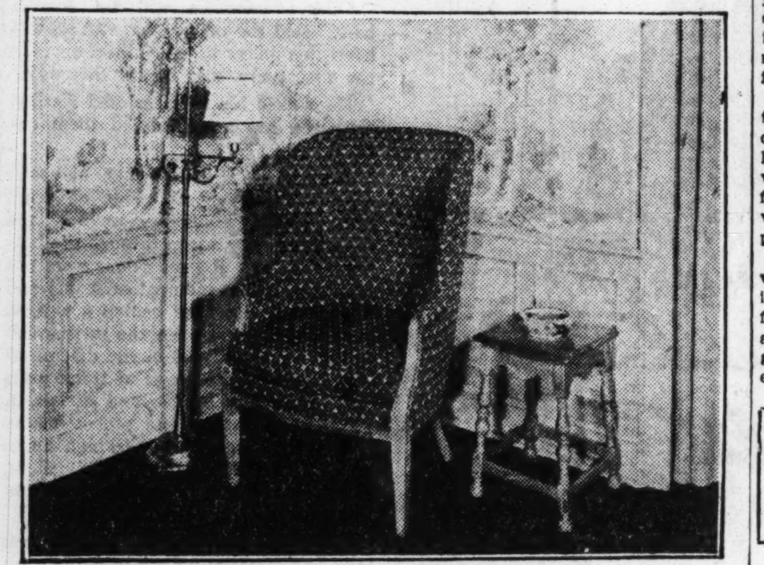
The pictures shown today make one think of the "stern and rockbound coast," and baked beans and warm doughnuts and elm trees arching their high branches over country roads, and "sugaring off" and all the other delectable objects that are synonymous with New England, yet all the furniture photographed was made right here in Chicago and was shown at the recent exhibition at the American Furniture Mart. It is illustrative of the strong trend for maple and early American styles.

In the medium price class these pieces are well made and have the charm that always goes hand in hand with simplicity. How much nicer this sofa, for instance, with its long, slim, aristocratic lines, than the huge, overstuffed couch one still sees, alas, in many stores. And how much better adapted are its plain lines, its thin sides and arms, to the modern small apartment than the enormous padded ones of the overstuffed variety. Also, the fabric which covers it is quieter and in better taste. A tapestry with a colors of green, blue, yellow, and red on a henna background.

The spoon-foot table at the left is excellent in design. Quaint prints and miniatures hang on the wall, which is papered in a diamond patterned design, each diamond having a sprig of flowers in the center.



A barrel chair is covered in chintz.



Simple lines are good and always appealing.

The chairs illustrated in the other photographs are seen to advantage against a background of wood paneling and scenic paper. The jolly barrel chair is covered in flowered plum colored glazed chintz and is accompanied by a pewter bridge lamp and a small end table with a trough for books. Again the wood is maple.

The other chair is equally simple in line and is pleasingly upholstered in a figured tapette, the predominating color being brown with small figures in green, rose, orange, and blue.

Although this furniture company did not set out to reform the industry it is unconsciously doing it a good turn, for instead of making the nondescript, cheap, shoddy stuff so easy to palm off on a guileless public, and so frequently done up till now, it is taking a big stride forward and is aligning itself with companies who make furniture at much higher prices, but whose designs are very little different, as far as excellent taste goes. It is making it possible for the person of average income to enjoy what, until recently, only his wealthy cousin could possess.

MONEY MADE AT HOME

How you have made or are making money at home is of interest to other women. Would you care to tell them about it? Address Money at Home, Sunday Tribune.

Fine Laundering.

I know a woman who does only fine laundering. She can hardly take care of all her customers, refuses everything that is not of the finest character, such as silk, lace, embroidery work, etc. You must call for and bring in your own work as there is such a demand for her service. She also mends beautifully. In fact, that is how she conceived the idea. She was educated in a convent school where she was taught just such things.

Nurse Maid.

"Oh my! how I wish I could get a nap," sighed my next door neighbor, who was the mother of an 8 months old teething baby. "I was up so much last night and I'm simply worn out."

"I'll take care of Junior every afternoon for a quarter, Mrs. Brooks," I offered.

So almost every afternoon from 2 o'clock until four, I keep the baby out in the fresh air, while his tired mother rests. I am only 12 years old and have earned $3.75 in three weeks.

E. C.

For Junior.

I am a boy 11 years old. In the town where we live there is no gas, most housewives using short hardwood clippings for the kitchen range. This wood is sold in only one size load. Upon delivery the driver charges $1.00 for throwing it into basemeent or woodshed. I went to different homes and said I would put the wood in at any time for 50 cents a load. Many homes use a load a month, so in this way I make a lot of extra money that I am saving for my high school days.—D. C. B.

Like Finding Extra Money.

We have a small herd of Jersey cows and sell our sweet cream in town each day. After we separate the cream there is always about eight gallons of skimmed milk, which we had been throwing away. I hated to see this waste, so finally decided to make cottage cheese to sell to our cream customers.

Soon I had standing orders to be filled each week, and sometimes twice a week. During the summer I manufactured 300 pounds of cheese, which sold for 20 cents per pound. This was clear profit and required practically no equipment. It was almost like finding the extra money.

G. P. G.

Cookies Paid for Gifts.

Finding it necessary to earn a little money at home to use for buying gifts for my friends at graduation time, I hit upon this scheme: "By getting up early in the morning, I found it possible to make several batches of cookies and candy before breakfast. After the morning chores, I took these to town and left them at one of the well patronized grocery stores.

Many women drifted into the store during the morning; perhaps some were attracted by the sign which I hung in a conspicuous part of the window advertising my wares."

I am glad to say that in this manner I earned enough money to pay amply for the gifts, besides enjoying the novelty being an amateur wage-earner.

E. T.

Turns Silhouette Vogue to Cash.

Getting my idea from pictures in various magazines, I make small silhouettes, using a heavy black ink. At a small cost I have my frames made at a paint store. Since silhouettes seem to remain in vogue it is not hard to sell them. Thus I earn a little money in my spare time at home.

A. L. H.

Gooda Business.

I make a gooda doughnuts which I packa in a basket. My little girl sella dem at thirty cents a doz. She putta on da roller skates and rolla around till doughnuts are all gone. Last year we paya for da house wid doughnuts. No we savea for a car.

Pet Economy

Would you care to pass on to some one else your pet economy? If so, address Pet Economy, Chicago Tribune.

Patches.

My pet economy is mending and patching bed sheets. When I hang them out on the line on wash day, they look more like crazy quilts than bed sheets, and I really am ashamed of them sometimes. But still it doesn't occur to me to discard them, and still I keep on mending and patching.

H. A. U.

For Soup.

As we are very fond of soups at our house, my pet economy is saving the leafy part of the celery stalk usually thrown away, drying it and keeping in an open mason jar to be used in flavoring soups.

J. S.

On Saving Curtains.

I make my curtains last one or two years longer by having the hem at the top and bottom of the same width. In that way I can reverse them when the lower part of the curtain becomes worn. I can place them upside down.

Z. B. B.

Cedar Chips.

Having a pencil sharpener that has a container for shavings, I save the shavings and put them in my closet to keep moths away. They have an odor of cedar. This is my pet economy.

H. A. W.

Borders for Flower Beds.

I never allow our old auto tires to be thrown away. Painted light green or white, they make attractive borders for small flower beds.

M. T.

Bone Fuel.

I save all meat bones and dry them. These I burn with a little hard wood on Saturday. I use this for fertilizer for my garden, saving many a dollar and also beautifying my home.

P. J. N.

Mended Hair Nets.

Actually mending her torn hair nets—this was an economy of an acquaintance of mine. Although she bought them by the dozen on sale, she took the time to mend nets which had become torn with strands of her own hair.

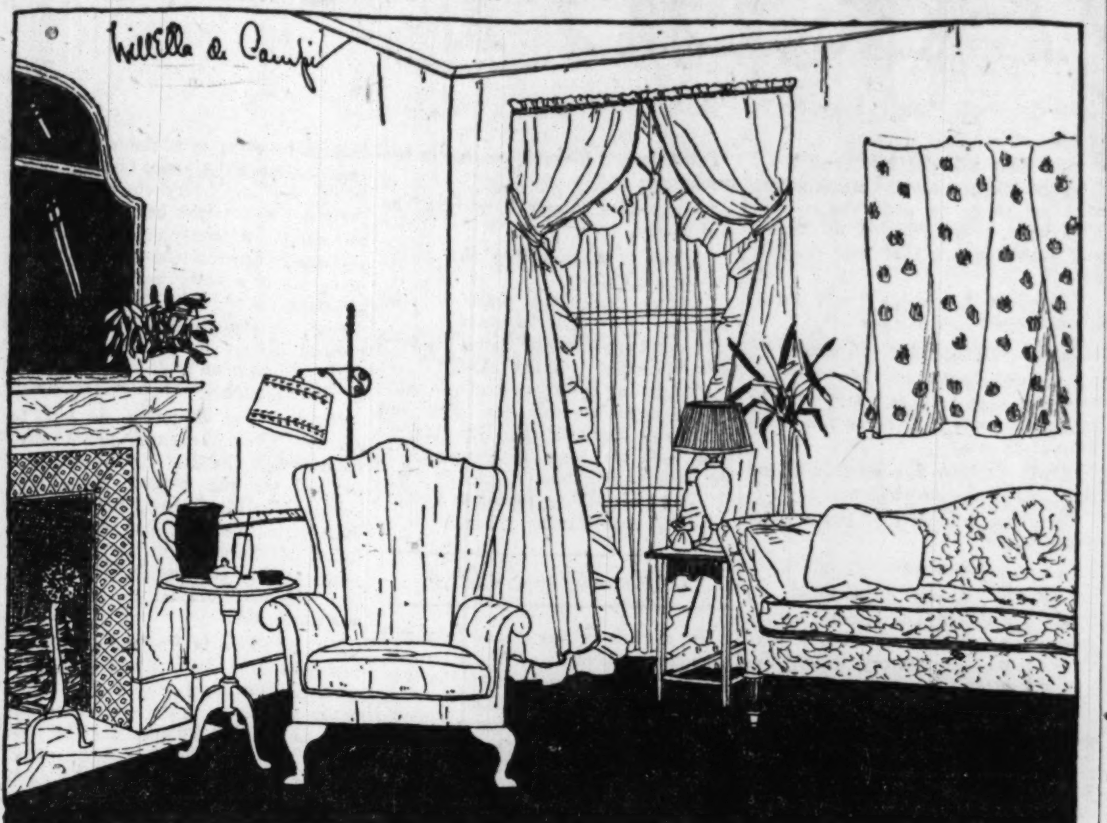
Good Color Schemes

By WillElla de Campi

A Carefully Worked Out Plan Will Make a House One Harmonious Unit Rather than Several Jarring Parts.



Henna, green, and yellow are the tones used in this living room.

GOOD color schemes are no more expensive than poor ones, and considerable saving may be effected in the furnishing of a home by the selection of a definite color scheme which may be carried out in any group of rooms. This does not mean, of course, that all the rooms in the house should be finished in exactly the same manner, with the same wall paper, curtains, draperies, etc. But there should be a certain definitely planned and carefully worked out scheme to present a pleasing relationship between the various rooms which are thrown together.

In considering the discouraging attempts of an inexperienced young housewife, the importance of harmonious color schemes is shown clearly. Living room and dining room in the young wife's new home were both charming, taken separately. However, one room was not thought of in relation to the other when the furnishings and decorations were being planned. Consequently, each detracted forcibly from the other when both were completed. Tragedy of this sort was skillfully avoided in the furnishing and decorating of another small house. A color scheme of henna, green and yellow was selected, and the finished result is altogether charming.

There is a little entrance hall with woodwork painted white. On the walls is a toile paper with the pattern in henna tones on a deep cream ground. A line of henna in a depression of the woodwork ties in nicely with the paper. The only piece of furniture here is a Chippendale lowboy with an old mirror in a gilt frame hanging above it. A deep green pottery bowl on the lowboy is filled with flowers. On the floor there is a deep green rug.

Wide open doorways, at each side of the entrance hall lead respectively into the living and dining rooms. In the living room, where there is a white marble mantel, the woodwork and wainscotting are painted white with a line of henna and the wall space above is painted a soft yellow. Glass curtains at the windows are of yellow silk voile and there are long draperies of henna colored taffeta finished with deep ruffles of the same material, as shown in the accompanying illustration.

Over the mantel is a large mirror in an antique gilt frame. At one side of the fireplace is a wing chair upholstered in henna colored strié velvet, and at the other side is a comfortable arm chair in sage green strié velvet. Convenient small tables are placed near these chairs.

A graceful sofa stands against the wall space between two windows. It is upholstered in a heavy decorative fabric with a design in sage green and gold tones on a light henna ground. On a small table at each end of the sofa there is an alabaster lamp with a silk shade in pale henna bound with green. An additional armchair in the room is done in sage green silk damask, and there is a round table beside it.

Against the wall space opposite the fireplace is a lovely secretary desk, accompanied by a graceful chair with seat and back upholstered in black damask—just the right note of contrast for this room. Plain carpeting in a soft henna tone covers the floor.

Though the same colors are carried into the dining room they are applied in an entirely different manner, so that there is no feeling of monotony. The walls here are papered. A delicate design of branches and leaves is in henna and sage green on a light yellow ground. Glass curtains of pale yellow silk voile are very full and hang to the ground. The draperies are made like those in the living room, but here they are of sage green taffeta, instead of henna.

Furniture is in Chippendale style and the chair seats are done in henna colored damask. On the long side table there is a pair of tôle urns in sage green and gold, filled with laurel branches. A convex mirror hangs over the side table. On the dining table there is a sage green damask runner with a gold flat braid edging. A low tôle bowl in green and gold and a pair of brass candelabra holding sage green candles decorate the table. Sidelights are fitted with pale yellow silk shades bound with green, and sage green carpeting is used on the floor.

In the little kitchen all the woodwork, including cabinets, is painted dull green and the walls are a light green. Linoleum in squares of black and white covers the floor. At the windows there are yellow chambray curtains. Cooking utensils and accessories are in yellow, green, and white.

Upstairs there are three bedrooms, and here, because the rooms are so completely separated from each other, different color schemes are introduced. In the main bedroom, with windows on three sides, the walls are done in a delightful English floral paper with a design in tones of rose, mauve, cream, and blue-green on a light, soft blue ground. Woodwork is painted cream and there are cream colored net glass curtains. Draperies of soft blue, semi-glazed chintz are finished with a binding in rose, mauve, and blue-green. Bed covers match the draperies, and there is a chaise longue upholstered in striped rep, repeating the drapery colors.

Many small cushions are done in plain colors, to match. On the floor there is a taupe rug. Side lights and lamps have shades of light rose or cream colored silk, bound with blue.

Cream colored net is used again for glass curtains in the bedroom across the hall, so that all the windows in the front of the house look the same from the outside. But here the draperies are of flowered glazed chintz in a vine pattern on a mauve ground. Walls are painted light mauve and woodwork is chartreuse green. Bed covers of rep are in the same tone of green bound with mauve. The furniture is walnut and there are deep amethyst rugs.

Completing the house is the third bedroom with a northeastern exposure. Light rose organdy glass curtains make a soft, glowing light. Draperies are of small-flowered linen in many colors on white ground. Walls are light rose and woodwork is white. The bed cover matches the glass curtains and dull rose rugs are used on the floor.

FOR THE ART GALLERY

(Antoinette Donnelly writes that hotel and restaurant keepers wish to discourage the use of lipsticks by women.—Napkins are ruined by the strenuous laundry methods which must be employed to remove the rouge stains.)

Thus business views with hostile eye
The ghosts of kisses gone astray;
The stuff that builds a lover's dream
Gets in the hard boiled waiter's way . . .
He raises hell on laundry day
When making out the linen slips . . .
Hotel men greet with no hurray
A print of Joyce's precious lips.

The small red seal that beauty sets
As symbol that romance is served
Is seldom by the bus-boy seized
And with art fixative preserved.
That eyes from some far future
swerved
May see and value the vignette,
A classic kiss, in crimson etched,
Upon a yellowed serviette.

COINCIDENCES

Your strange coincidence will be printed if you will submit it to "Strange Coincidences," Chicago Tribune.

Relatives.

While traveling on a train to New York recently I got into conversation with another woman passenger. She was on her way to Ireland, the home of her ancestors, this being her third visit. I asked her what county and town her people came from. She told me, and it happened to be the identical place my forebears were from. I asked her name, and it was a name I had frequently heard my grandmother mention as relatives of hers. She also recognized my name as a family name. I mentioned at least a dozen names of people I had heard spoken of in the family, and she, having spent a summer in that vicinity studying the tombstones and the family history, was able to identify them all. With our combined knowledge, gleaned from our deceased grandmothers, we were able to trace our ancestors back to a common source. And, in addition to this, she lived just two blocks from me in Chicago, and we had never seen each other.

H. W.

Same Peddler.

A friend of mine lived in one suburb and I in another. She moved to our village several blocks from my home. One day we were talking and she asked me if there were any vegetable men that came to the houses. I said I had a fine one and would send him over. She said she had one she certainly liked in the other village. Before our talk had ended we discovered our excellent peddlers were one and the same man making his rounds in different villages on different days.

M. A.

An Old Pal.

We had just moved to a new city where we had no acquaintances. One night our little girl became ill and we were advised by a neighbor to call a doctor.

When the doctor came my husband opened the door, to find that he was greeting an old college chum whom he had not seen for several years.

M. K.

True Friend.

A newcomer to Chicago, unsuccessful in finding employment and friendless in the strange city, I was indeed despondent and in low spirits. With a heavy heart and a mind occupied by gloomy thoughts I decided after one week in the city to give up the fight and return home. If only there were some one here I knew, how much brighter the face of things would appear!

I sat in a street car and resolved that on the following day I should leave for home. Inadvertently my eyes wandered to the young lady sitting beside me, and my attention was attracted to a ring on her hand. I recognized suddenly the emblem of my high school, and looking up I met the eyes of a very dear friend of my high school days.

With a true friend near my entire view of life was changed. She would hear nothing of my leaving; she insisted that I stay at her home for the time at least, and through her efforts I secured work at the office where she was employed. I have always counted our meeting one of the greatest pieces of good fortune in my life.

M. W.

Sisters.

A new neighbor was moving into a vacant house. The lady next door decided on getting acquainted after the "straightening up" of the household goods was completed. During her visit each was telling of her relatives and childhood days. Strange, but both women had played the same games in the same way and each had the same number of brothers and sisters whom they had not seen for years. Their friendship lasted and visits were made quite often. Later it was learned the ladies were sisters that were separated when small girls. The parents had died and the children were adopted by different families from an orphanage.

M. B. J.

A Raise.

It was with trembling hands and fluttering heart I finally got up nerve to go into the boss' office to request the raise in salary I knew I had earned. While passing the chief clerk's office he spied me and called. He then informed me that my boss had just called him in and told him to raise my salary [even above what I was just going to ask for]. What a relief this coincidence was!

The Biggest Liar

Who is the biggest liar you have ever known and what was his biggest lie? Tribune readers would like to hear about it. Write it simply and use only one side of the paper. Mail it to Biggest Liar, Sunday Tribune.

Lie Bounced.

Some years ago a neighbor of ours fell out with a friend of long standing. The friend left town in a huff, declaring she was through forever. Laying all the blame on her friend, our neighbor decided to get even and make her friend wish she had not been so hasty. So she wrote a mutual acquaintance of theirs that she had just been left a huge fortune by some distant relative. Some time later when the friend in question had to return to town on business she accidentally ran across her old friend living in one room in the direst poverty.

M. O.

Felt Small.

One day when I was out in the woods a hard storm and rain fall came upon me without any warning. Looking around for shelter I spied a fallen log. Finding it hollow, I crawled in. The rain poured steadily for hours, but finally ceased. Trying to crawl out I discovered the log was swollen and I was a prisoner. Pondering over my past life, I thought of all the mean, contemptible things I had done and felt so small I crawled right out of the log.

Here's the True Story of a Frail Old Lady, Fighting Against Great Odds for a Meager Existence; Won't You Help?

WHEN one is young and able-bodied no matter what difficulty besets you or misfortune is visited upon you there is always the hope of a brighter future, even if it is buried in a maze of worries. Willingness and perserverance are efficient arms in this battle against trying odds and the young man or woman who possesses them need not be too disconsolate when bad breaks appear on the horizon.

But senility presents another picture. With its helplessness and infirmities, the fruitful years forever gone, think what terror and despair must accompany a needy old age! Many of the people who have reached these years which should be spent in sublime comfort have had a life of toil and struggle with never a penny that wasn't well earned and never a bite they didn't fight for.

One of these is Mrs. D., tiny, frail, 65 years old, and, what is worse than all these combined, alone. It's so much harder to face the misery and grief of a starved life when there isn't a friend or a family in the offing to lend at least the moral support you need. Although she is an excellent cook she cannot find a situation because there are always younger and therefore more desirable hands to take the place she thinks she could fill, and the small income she needs to provide her few necessities becomes increasingly more difficult to obtain.

Of course, when one has given up the fight there are the public institutions that gladly give the shelter and the care these people cannot provide for themselves. But Mrs. D. hasn't admitted defeat and the thought of becoming what she calls a public burden fills her with horror. And so from early morning until nightfall, or as long as her feeble strength permits, she continues this search for work.

Sometimes the situation becomes almost too much for her and she breaks down and asks me what is to become of her. Can you supply the answer to this question, or can you give her the assistance that will help to relieve her fear and anguish?

Request for White Aprons.

"I am a widowed mother with a baby girl 15 months old and I have been out of work for a long time. I was offered a job as waitress but I have no aprons to wear. If you know of some one who has some white aprons which would be suitable, I would appreciate having them or any other clothing and shoes. I wear size 40 or 42; shoes, size 6. MRS. M. W."

With employment at a premium as it is these days, it would be nothing short of tragic if this widow had to pass up the golden opportunity of getting work because she lacks a white apron or two. If you can supply her it will mean that she will again be able to support herself and her child.

Asks for Sewing Machine.

"My husband has been out of work for several months and our bills are now sky high. He has just started at another job and I am anxious to help him get square again. I have had an offer to do some sewing at home but I have no machine and I have been wondering of you could help me secure one. MRS. R. S."

The sewing machine which you no longer use would be instrumental in adding a few extra dollars to the coffers of this needy household. May not Mrs. R. S. have it?

Farm Equipment Needed.

My husband is coming home from Speedway hospital, partly disabled. He must have work out of doors and farming is the thing that appeals to him. We have had an offer of a farm where we can get our start but we have no equipment for it. I thought that possibly some farmer who is disposing of his land might have tools which he will have no use for. We will be glad to get anything. We have six children, the eldest 8 years of age, and we feel that the farm offers the best opportunity for us. MRS. E. G."

Should these people get the proper start their problem will be beautifully solved for them and it may mean speedy recovery for the afflicted father. Any farm implements you may have or know of would be an immense help to them.

HARLEY AND JOAN by ROLAND PERTWEE

THE STORY IN RESUME.

Harley Trevelyan, spending the last night of his leave from the front in London, has an engagement to dine with Paula Drayton, whose younger brother, through Trevelyan's influence, has been assigned to his own battery. Paula grows emotional just before they go into dinner and leaves after telling him that she loves him. Harley is walking the streets when the Zeppelins raid London, and, being used to gunfire, does not run for cover as every one else does. A young woman in a window sends her brother to bring him in to the house, and he discovers that the boy is Freddie Miller, an old schoolmate, and the girl is Joan. With Joan he goes up on the roof to watch the air raid, and they see an airplane shoot down one of the Zeps. Following the air raid Harley, Joan, and Freddie have a bite in the kitchen, and Harley realizes that he is in love with this girl he has known only a few moments. The next day Freddie and he leave for the front, and when Harley rejoins his battery he discovers that Paula's brother, a second lieutenant, is already on hand. Maj. Fawlk, Harley's commanding officer, writes a letter to Joan's father intimating that Harley is in love with Paula, and Joan, wondering about the letter, talks with Paula. Joan goes to Amiens with a relative and Harley gets a day's leave and visits her there and they become engaged. Harley returns to the front lines and he and David narrowly escape death while on observation duty.

INSTALLMENT VIII.

Hand to Hand.

MAJOR FAWLK was seated at an improvised table in a sandbagged, loose box which was doing duty as orderly room. He was alone and his expression betokened a mood of exaggerated well being. The "strafe" had been a success. The brigadier had so far forgotten his usual practice as to express satisfaction in the part played by the heavy artillery.

Fawlk acknowledged Harley's salute with a lean smile and listened to the brief report he gave, drumming his fingers the while upon the table top.

"H'm. Nearly went up, did you?"

"Near enough, sir."

"That would have been a pity. Is Drayton all right?"

"He was a bit shaken, sir. He did very well, though."

"I must have a word with him."

Harley hesitated.

"He's asleep. I think he needs it pretty badly."

"H'm! Tomorrow will do as well. Yes. I hear things will be rather lively in the near future."

"So I understand, sir."

"Very likely, indeed." He stopped and looked at Harley through half closed eyes. "Tell me, Trevelyan, who was it you went to see at Amiens?"

"A friend, sir."

"But what friend?"

There was no justification whatever for any such interrogation. On the other hand, if Harley were to get leave, he would have to give reasons.

"Since you ask, sir, I went to see Miller's sister."

Fawlk raised his brows uncomprehendingly.

"Miller's sister! It is more usually the Miller's daughter, is it not? What Miller?"

"The T. O.'s sister, sir. Joan Miller."

Fawlk put the palms of his hands flat on the table, got up, and barked: "What's that? Who?"

But Harley didn't repeat what he had said.

Fawlk's tongue ran along his lips.

"Why should you wish to see her?"

"For the best reason, sir. We are going to be married."

"O," said Fawlk. "O, you are? You are? That—that's most interesting."

He sat down again and made some pretense of reading a paper. But the hand that held it was trembling and he crumpled the paper into a ball and jerked it aside.

Fawlk's Eyes Narrow.

"And when?" he demanded. "When do you propose marrying?"

"As soon as I can get leave."

Fawlk seemed to relax.

"In that case you may have to wait a long time. I had a chit an hour ago canceling all leave warrants—indefinitely."

Harley sucked in a sharp breath.

"But, look here, sir, that doesn't mean that young Drayton?"

"Obviously. It is not the habit of the general staff to make exceptions."

"In that case," said Harley tensely, "Drayton must see an M. O."

Fawlk's eyes narrowed to slits.

"And why?"

"Because if ever a boy needed a break, he does. He's as near the end of his tether as no matter."

"That is for me to decide," said Fawlk.

"Yes, sir, but he had a nasty bump today and it did him no good. The knowledge that he was due for leave was about the only thing that kept him together. Take that away and"—Harley humped his shoulders expressively.

"Captain Trevelyan," said Fawlk, choosing his words as though they were very hard to find, "while I command this battery I shall run it without the advice or assistance of my subordinates. I do not practice favoritism and I will not countenance its practice by any one of my officers."

The blanket at the door was pushed aside and Frost, his face more scarlet than usual, stumbled in.

"Sir."

"Yes, Mr. Frost."

"Telephone call from the O. Pip. Lamington has been hit."

"Hit?"

"Killed, sir. Caught it in the head."

Anxious to say more, Frost turned to Harley, but before he could speak Fawlk cut in,

"That will do, Mr. Frost."

"Very good, sir. O, sir, do you want me to go up and take over?"

"I have no recollection of having said anything, but that will do, Mr. Frost."

"Poor old Lamington," said Frost, saluted clumsily, and went out.

Fawlk picked up the telephone.

"An orderly to ask Mr. Drayton to report here at once," said he. As he hung up the receiver he raised his eyes challengingly.

It was perhaps five seconds before Harley took up the challenge.

"Are you sending that boy up the line again?"

"I am. And why?"

"Because, if you don't mind, I'd like to go instead, and because, sir, to send Drayton would be a"—he checked the imprecatory adjective—"an impractical thing to do."

Fawlk nodded slowly.

"Very Good, Sir."

"You are determined to question my command, Captain Trevelyan."

Harley was holding himself on a tight rein.

"No, sir. I am as keen on the discipline and efficiency of this battery as you are and I have every right to say that a shell shocked boy is unfit to be in charge of the O. Pip."

Once again Fawlk nodded.

"I will put that opinion on record," said he. "Have you anything further to say?"

"I ask to be allowed to go instead."

"Which is an act of heroism and self-sacrifice you will not be required to make."

"Sir," said Harley, and there was genuine appeal in his voice. "No doubt through my own fault I have offended you and I'm ready to take what's coming on that account, but don't take it out of a lad who's not responsible. That would be brutal."

There was no need to reply for at that moment David, heavy and perplexed by sleep, blundered in and stood stupidly to attention.

"Mr. Drayton," said Fawlk, "you will be sorry to hear Mr. Lamington has been killed at the O. Pip."

Save that his tongue wandered over parched lips David made no movement.

"In the circumstances you will report there for duty forthwith."

"At the— O— Pip, sir?"

"At the O. Pip."

"The same O. Pip?"

"Certainly."

Once more the horror to which sleep had put a merciful period gathered like a storm at the back of David's eyes, but he only said:

"Very good, sir," and turned drunkenly towards the door.

"And Mr. Drayton."

David stopped.

"Sir?"

"I am sorry to say that your leave, in fact, that all leave has been temporarily canceled."

"O, God," said David Drayton.

"What was that? Turn and face me—face me, at once." The words rattled out sharp and venomous as bullets from a machine gune.

"Was that a proper expression to use before your commanding officer? What does it mean? What does it imply? You don't answer. You leave me to form my own conclusions, which are that they were the words of some one who is unfit to hold a commission. In short, the words of a coward."

David seemed hardly aware of what was said until the name coward pierced his dull consciousness.

You Were a Witness.

In an instant all the limpness vanished, and he drew himself up taut as a steel tie. With clenched fists he took one step forward which brought him to the table. Through shut teeth he said two words.

"Stand up."

With the realization of what was coming Harley Trevelyan pivoted on his heel and faced the wall.

"Stand up."

At the repetition Fawlk pushed back the box on which he was seated, rose and leaned across the table with his jaw out. So for one second boy and man faced each other and then the boy struck. Who shall say what strength accumulated misery, hatred, indignation and disenchantment lent to that blow. It was delivered with every particle of energy his mind and body possessed. It landed on the point of the jaw and Fawlk, lost to all sense of time and space, crumpled and went down behind the table. David stood over him, gasping and grunting like a runner at the end of a race.

Then,

"Drayton," said Harley, his face was still to the wall. "You had your orders. Don't hang about. Get off at once."

"Yes—but—but——"

"You had your orders. Obey 'em."

He did not look at the boy. He heard rather than saw David stumble out into the friendless night. After he had gone he still stood without moving. Shells were bursting down the road. In that confined place their detonations sounded like the roar of hungry lions. Slowly another sound intruded itself, the scrape of boots on a stone floor—the bump and rustle of a hand falling heavily on a litter of papers—some one breathing with difficulty, and a voice coming, it seemed, from a long way off.

"Where—is—he?"

Harley turned. Propping himself against the table and rocking on his heels stood Fawlk.

"Sir?"

"Where's Drayton?"

"Gone."

"Gone—gone. Where?"

"To carry out your orders."

Fawlk leaned forward, peering in bewilderment.

"You were a witness, Trevelyan," he said slowly.

"I was a witness that the orders were given."

"Orders—damn the orders—of the assault—of the blow he struck."

"I don't understand," came the very slow rejoinder. "What blow?"

Abandoning the support of the table Fawlk lurched across the floor and stared into Harley's eyes. But Harley's eyes were as barren of expression as the wall behind him.

"What blow?" he repeated.

"S-so," said Fawlk. "S-so."

David Dies—Smiling.

For a while neither spoke. Then with a sudden resolve Fawlk moved swiftly to the entrance and he flung the blanket aside. Against the flash of a distant shell burst his figure resembled the silhouette of a monstrous scarecrow.

"Orderly," he cried. "Orderly," and again, "Orderly."

An orderly came running from fifty yards away.

"Sir!"

"Follow Mr. Drayton towards the O. Pip. Instruct him to return at once."

"Very good, sir."

Once more he turned to Harley.

"You know what this means? He will be shot."

"On your word alone?" said Harley. "On your word alone?"

"I fancy that his word will be more damning than mine—or your silence."

"The word of a shell shocked boy—which I shall deny—deny?"

Fawlk moved to the table and picked up the telephone.

"Put that down," said Harley, "and listen to me. Tonight you gave a needless order to a boy who was in no fit state to carry it out. You followed it up with the brutal announcement that his leave had been canceled. You knew what the result would be, because I'd warned you. But even so your foul conceit wasn't satisfied—and like the swine you are you called him a coward. If you want my evidence at the court martial you can have it. But that evidence ends with the word coward and with a boy who went out into the night. If your imagination can supply a sequel, and by God, I can think of a just one—go ahead and prove it—alone."

Fawlk pushed the telephone aside and sat at the table with his clenched hands stretched out before him.

"We will continue this discussion when Mr. Drayton returns," he said.

But David Drayton did not return, for presently an orderly came running with the news that his body had been picked up beside a fresh shell hole at the cross roads. A scimitar of flying steel had torn the heart from his breast. He was dead and smiling, sharing the jest, perhaps, that all day long had haunted his imagination or learning, perhaps, the truth of what Harley had said that a laugh can help a man no end on an awkward journey.

When the orderly had gone, Harley lifted his arms and let them fall in a gesture that touched the foundations of despair. Barely above a whisper he said:

"Poor old boy—poor old boy. It settles his account."

"Ours remains open," said a voice behind him.

A New Spirit Born.

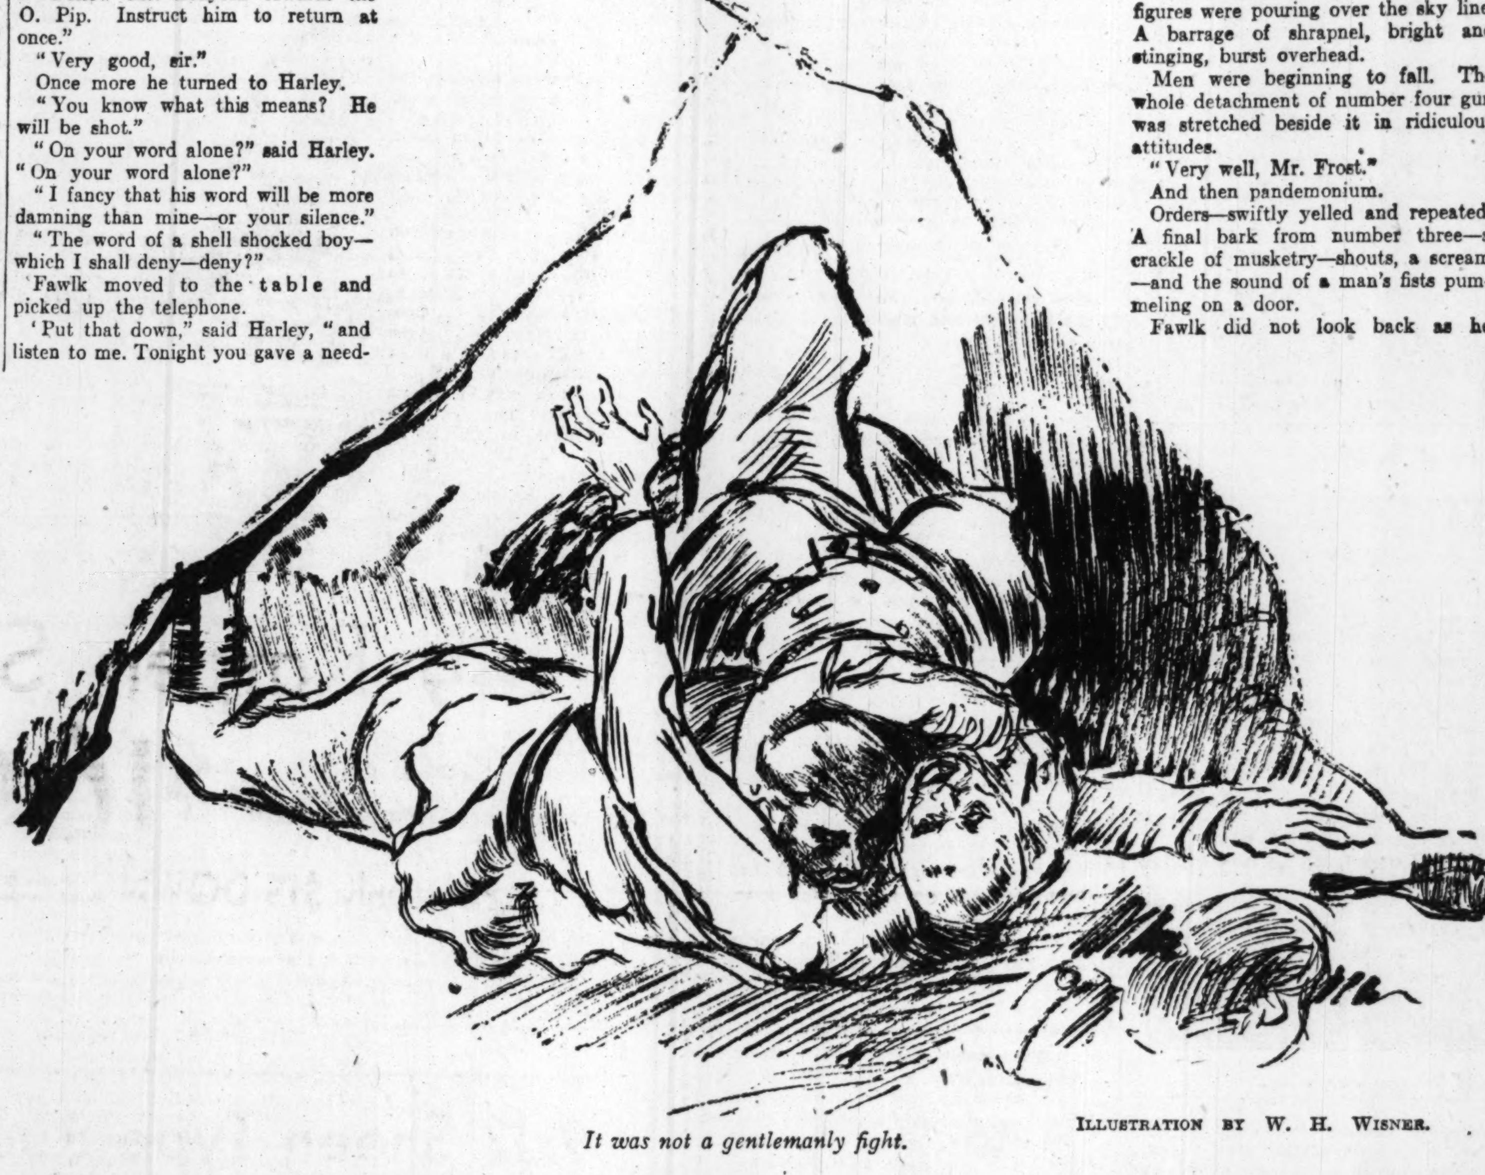
It was a strange pulsating world that Harley entered as he passed from the O. C.'s quarters—a world in which the earth's crust trembled to the rhythm of marching hosts—the clot-clot of cavalry squadrons—the jingling of field guns—the burring of tanks—the moan of motor lorries and tractors and the splutter and clank of caterpillars hauling heavies into the line.

Of the mighty concentration of troops and war material which poured into the Cambrai front that November night in 1917 an epic might be written. Unexpected, unannounced from the back areas—from north and south they came. In lorries, buses, trains, Decauvilles, G. S. wagons, on horses, cycles, mounted and afoot, hour by hour they mustered as clouds gather before a storm.

There is no parallel in the whole history of the war for the activities of that night. A new spirit had been borne in every one—a new determination to be done with the whole business—to knock out—wipe out and overwhelm any and every combination of defense which might oppose the path to victory. A triumph of silent, swift and deadly organization was afoot—the launching of a new unadvertised form of attack. A whirlwind barrage—a sector of the enemy lines breached and crushed flat by a wall of juggernaut tanks and an open road for the cavalry to ride through.

Nothing was forgotten or left to chance. Even the exact minute was stated when the R. E.'s should have patched up the broken roads that spanned No Man's Land for the guns, ammunition columns and supplies to follow at the heels of the advancing army. Before this perfection of design and administration failure or collapse was unthinkable.

Yet, although in England that night joy bells rang from steeples and excited patriots fired rockets and shook hands with each other and called for beer, failure and collapse was the final accountancy. A fog—a low, white, clinging fog—in which regiments fumbled like lost children was to blame. A fog and the fortuitous presence of a reserve division traveling north at the back of the German lines and decanted from trains and flung into the breach.



It was not a gentlemanly fight.

ILLUSTRATION BY W. H. WISNER.

In for the Duration.

And presently the cavalry were riding back whence they had come, and the tanks went rumbling down the road and the infantry dug themselves in and the guns settled down like old hens who sun themselves in an orchard. And the gentleman who drew the war maps for newspapers made nice little semicircles bulging eastward from the old familiar trench line and filled them in with a cross batch of gray that all who should behold might rejoice.

The lightning offensive—the first phase of the battle of Cambrai—had ended in a stalemate.

In the turmoil of those mad days there had been no time for private animosities. Fawlk and Harley had worked in seeming forgetfulness of what had taken place the night before the attack was launched. But with the stopping of the machine and with little to occupy them but the dull routine of a battery situated in a quiet sector of the line, consciousness of each other awoke.

Although no word was spoken, Harley was aware that Fawlk was watching him as a cat watches—crouched and balanced for a spring.

That what he had done was contrary to all military principles did not cause Harley an instant of sorrow or unrest. Had David lived and been court martialed he would have sworn—as he could in perfect truth have sworn—that he had seen nothing. That much he owed to Paula—to David—to a sense of justice and fair play that could never be influenced by king's regulations and the manual of military law.

He was not a professional soldier—he was "in for the duration," that was all. That few professional soldiers confronted with an act of mutiny would have acted as he had did not weigh with Harley. He was satisfied that no professional soldier would have deliberately provoked an attack from a boy whose reason was shell shocked beyond voluntary control. Although Harley would have welcomed the attempt he knew that Fawlk would not risk taking disciplinary action against him. The man's egotism and personal conceit were too strong to allow him to embark upon an enterprise that invited so many possibilities of failure. To advertise that he had been knocked down by a second lieutenant and to be unable to prove it was not the kind of admission to recommend itself to a man of his character.

But, although the incident was apparently closed, Harley was aware that it would never be forgotten or forgiven. He had made an enemy whose determination to knife him in the dark would never waver or falter.

The weight of responsibility shouldered with David Drayton had not been lifted by David's death. Harley had written to Paula. It was the hardest and worst job he had ever been called upon to tackle.

Also he wrote to Joan asking her when she should return to go and see Paula and then, with a flash of womanish intuition, postscripted "Better not perhaps."

David Drayton's death had dulled the fine edge of his own happiness.

The Counter Attack.

The war, which for a few glorious hours of hope and uncertainty had proved itself worth while, had become a nuisance again.

The future, so far as they cared to look into it, held only the promise of another winter. That the enemy, recovered from the surprise attack, might attempt to dispute and recapture the lost territory did not disturb the imaginations of any one. The show had fizzled out and there was an end to it.

The success of the counter attack launched on a gray November dawn a few days later may have been largely due to this apathy. A hurricane of shells lasting only a few minutes and followed by recurrent waves of infantry annihilated the flimsy defenses and overwhelmed practically every battery in that sector of the front.

Once more the door to Amiens—to Paris—to a German victory was open wide.

Harley was asleep when it began.

The first news of the catastrophe was when a rabble of infantry, their backs to the enemy, poured through the battery position.

Fawlk, in pyjamas and a British warm, gripped one of the runaways to demand an explanation. He got it.

"Fritz—on top of us—millions of 'em."

The man wriggled free and ran.

A signaler appeared—bewildered and stupid.

"Seige Park—Tractors, at once," Fawlk commanded.

The signaler dived below.

Less than a mile away were seen the advance guard of those masses in field gray. They were moving slowly, casually, like men out for a stroll.

The battery personnel in all stages of undress were at the guns now.

"Open sights at four hundred yards," was the order.

In the roar that followed Fawlk shot a glance at the door of Harley's billet. That massive door of chestnut.

"Trevelyan," he called.

"Sir," sounded from within.

"Get dressed and come here."

"Anything wrong?"

"No, but get dressed."

"Coming right away, sir."

A roof timber was lying at Fawlk's feet; stooping, he picked it up and laid it against a panel of the door, wedging the other end firmly into the ground.

Two Guns Saved.

Like a clumsy elephant, Frost came plunging up the steps of the cellar. Fawlk was twenty feet away from the door of Harley's billet when Frost stood panting before him.

"Orders—heavy artillery—retire."

Increasing numbers of those gray figures were pouring over the sky line. A barrage of shrapnel, bright and stinging, burst overhead.

Men were beginning to fall. The whole detachment of number four gun was stretched beside it in ridiculous attitudes.

"Very well, Mr. Frost."

And then pandemonium.

Orders—swiftly yelled and repeated. A final bark from number three—a crackle of musketry—shouts, a scream—and the sound of a man's fists pummeling on a door.

Fawlk did not look back as he moved to where the car waited down the road. He did not even waste a glance at those four silent guns—which like great black toads crouched in the orchard. The faces of men who raced past him were twisted with fear—and the shame of retreat. His own was untroubled—was expressionless. He even smiled.

A little way down the road he saw Freddie Miller.

Freddie was standing on the footboard of a tractor, one of four which, rolling like ships at sea, were racing up to the line.

Freddie was cursing every man and every obstacle in the road. Among other things he cursed the major's car.

"Out of the way, you bloody rats," he cried.

There can be very little doubt that Freddie Miller's fate would have been had not a couple of retreating machine gunners paused in amazement at the spectacle of some one running toward rather than away from the enemy. Inspired by his enthusiasm they set up their spitfire upon its tripod and checked the advance before the battery position until such a time as Freddie had coupled up two of the guns to the tractors and dispatched them down the road in the direction of safety. It is probable he might have saved the other guns had not the driver of the third tractor, in eagerness and confusion, reversed into a shell hole and blocked the farm road.

In face of this calamity the machine gunners and the remaining drivers took to flight.

Harley a Prisoner.

Through a seam in the paneling of the massive chestnut door that held him prisoner, Harley Trevelyan watched the first wave of German infantry sweep over the battery position.

There was little evidence of enthusiasm or triumph. The faces of those who came within range of Harley's observation wore expressions of bewilderment at the ease with which the attack had been carried out.

Harley, who could speak German with some fluency, overheard one man say to another:

"Surely something worse than this is in store for us."

The whole affair was without precedent—a walkover.

Came an order and the door of the harness room was flung open.

With his hands in his trousers pockets, Harley walked into a bristle of bayonets.

A young German officer, almost a boy, looked him up and down in a mixture of surprise and admiration.

"Thunder and lightning," he said, "but you're a cool one."

Harley did not return the smile, but he asked:

"Do we take prisoners today—or not, mein herr?"

"We do," was the answer, and from the ranks behind came a grunt of approval.

An order was given and a blue jowled Bavarian placed himself at Harley's side.

"Other prisoners will be coming back," said the officer boy. "You will keep this officer here and join up with the first party that comes this way."

He clicked his heels, saluted Harley, mustered his men, and led them onward.

With despair gnawing at his soul, Harley Trevelyan sat on an oil drum and watched wave after wave of the victorious army sweep through the battery position. His sensations were not enviable in that moment of shame and impotence. Prisoned behind a wedged door, he had not even the satisfaction of having taken part in the defense of the battery. The work of three years lay before him broken and useless. A litter of dead men and broken metal. It was a tragic end to the high hopes of a few days before. In silent, smouldering anger he watched the pageant develop before him.

For three-quarters of an hour men and war material poured over the landscape. The ground trembled to the rhythm of marching feet. The air rang with the clatter and jingle of artillery and limbers. Every moment Harley expected parties of prisoners to pass that way, but none came and at the end of an hour he and the Bavarian were the only men alive as far as the eye could see. The war had passed over them and beyond.

Robbing the Dead.

There was something uncanny about the isolation and the loneliness that had descended upon them. It seemed to have pierced the heavy imagination of the Bavarian who, until then, had stood an immovable statue, watching Harley with a finger caressing the trigger of his rifle.

"Back," said he. "Get back into your hole," and without waiting for Harley to obey pushed him into the harness room and wedged the door.

"Cold feet," thought Harley, but a moment later, through the crack in the panel, he realized that he was wrong.

The Bavarian was robbing the dead.

For perhaps twenty minutes this ghoulish business proceeded with a thoroughness that argued familiarity. To see the bodies of men with whom for the last three years he had been on terms of friendship and affection subjected to this treatment was torture and when, later, the door was thrown open, Harley's face was white with a passionate desire to kill.

The muzzle of the rifle was trained upon the pit of his stomach and the Bavarian was looking at him with a greedy light in his small piglike eyes.

"Turn out your pockets," grunted the man, "and if you try any tricks I'll dig out your liver with this bayonet."

It is doubtful if the loss of a few pounds and some personal odds and ends would have weighed with Harley in the circumstances in which he found himself. Beside the freedom he had lost the rest was of little account. But Joan's picture in the little cigaret case was in his breast pocket and the thought of surrendering it to this robber of dead men drove prudence to the winds.

"Then take this for a start," he said, and kicked the oil drum at the Bavarian with sudden and surprising energy.

It was a desperate and seemingly hopeless thing to do, but luck favored him. The drum struck the man's bayonet and deflected the bullet by a hair's breadth. An instant later they were locked together in an inextricable tangle of writhing legs and arms.

Harley Reached It First.

It was not a gentlemanly fight. The Bavarian had weight as well as strength and getting astride Harley made a valiant attempt to cut his head off with the raw edge of the oil drum, but as he raised it Harley's left hand fastened on his throat like the jaws of a dog. The drum fell from the man's grasp and he gripped Harley's wrist. Harley dragged his right hand free and seizing the Bavarian by the forearm crashed his elbow on the brick floor and broke the bone. With a scream of agony the Bavarian slewed over and fastened his teeth in Harley's shoulder, at the same time driving his knee into Harley's stomach. Harley's breath deserted him with a screech. His hand releasing its grip swept the floor and encountered a hair brush. It was a common hair brush with a handle. He had bought it at Doullens, having lost his own in a battery shift. When a man is lying on top of you trying with his teeth to gnaw a way through to your carotid artery it is not easy to kill him with a hair brush. But anything is worth trying in an extremity. Harley knew if he failed the Bavarian would take Joan's picture. That was unthinkable, and it lent him vigor. He hooked the brush down with a crash on the base of the man's skull. But as well he might have hit the stone floor beneath them. He tried again, lower down, using the edge, a rabbit punch in the nape of the neck.

The Bavarian made a sick sort of noise and reared himself up dizzily. Harley changed the brush from his left hand to his right and smote again with every ounce of his strength. The brush cut a groove in the frontal bone. But the man was not dead. He struggled to his feet like a drunk and looked vaguely about him for his fallen rifle.

But Harley reached it first, slipped a cartridge in the breech and blew out his brains.

The Bavarian sat down quite peacefully in the corner of the harness room and Harley was sick.

. . . .

Sandwiched between the German advance and their reserves at the back, Harley Trevelyan stumbled from the harness room into an empty and neglected world. Not a soul was to be seen. For company he had only the dead and the black deserted guns.

An idea was slowly forming in his mind. Had those two guns been put out of action before the retreat? It would be worth finding out.

Rocking drunkenly he followed the farm road toward number three. The way led him by a litter of straw and rubbish which heaved up amazingly before his eyes.

Then a voice croaked.

"Harley—good God!"

Once in a Wifetime

By Octavus Roy Cohen

overt act on his part and he figured himself engaged in counting lily roots from then henceforward.

He depressed clutch and brake, extinguished his lights and also came to a halt by the side of the road—perhaps four hundred yards to the rear of Opus Randall's car. He found himself in the position of the man who had the bear by the tail.

His pursuit could be made successful at any moment. But just what disaster would crown that success, he shuddered to consider. Johnny didn't have a weapon, and unquestionably the bandit must have. Even if he didn't, fist-to-fist combat with a desperate man mountain was not at all to Johnny's liking.

He was in an appalling quandary. The more he considered the situation the sadder he became. There was absolutely nothing he could do—and he realised that he had to do it immediately. In his breast was a feeling of resentment against the bandit—plus a growing terror. Johnny had never been partial to desperadoes anyway, and this particular one had him plenty perturbed.

When Opus Randall completed his gagging and trussing process he again climbed into the car and continued into the night. He drove with slight interest, and the pursuing car came along with an interest even slighter.

If Johnny was worried about what would happen to him if he succeeded in overhauling the person who had kidnaped Garnish, Opus was even more worried about what he could do with the lady whom he had abducted.

Both cars were moving through the woods the other side of Shades mountain. Save where the headlamps cut a path of brilliance through the night, everything was deeply dark.

A Shot in the Night.

Opus wasn't enjoying himself. Since his captive was the wife of his best friend he obviously could not leave her alone in the woods. It was equally impossible to escort her to Birmingham since he realized that she was already conscious, and once he removed the handkerchief from his face recognition would be instant—and disastrous. He wished now that he had been a trifle less impulsive, and he swore a mighty swear that he would never again cast himself in a hero rôle save before the camera.

The pursuit dragged. In the first place Opus didn't know he was being pursued, and in the second place the last thing in the world which Johnny desired was to catch the car he was so valiantly chasing. But his headlights betrayed him. Twice Opus turned a worried head to glance at the car which was drifting slowly along behind him. Both times Johnny saw the masked face, and fresh terror chilled him.

And then something happened; something which immediately and positively determined Johnny Skidd on a course of action.

Opus Randall's car blew a tire!

The sound of a blowout is a startling thing at best. Here in the deep, dark woods it was little less than awful. And it conveyed a horrific message to Mr. Skidd.

Unquestionably the bandit had taken a shot at him. It sounded like a shot—and Johnny's mind was attuned to just such an event. But even though the bandit had fired once with a fair chance of success, Johnny was positive that he was not going to afford the desperado another such opportunity.

Johnny's borrowed car slithered to the side of the road and Johnny catapulted to the ground. For one wild instant his leaping figure was limned in the glare of his own headlights, and in that split second Opus Randall recognized the little supervisor.

Mr. Randall yelled at Johnny, and his strident voice conveyed to Mr. Skidd only that he was wanted by the kidnaper for purposes of personal assassination. Whereupon Mr. Skidd grew upon his heels the wings of Mercury and went crashing into the undergrowth.

Mr. Randall stared with puzzlement after the disappearing gentleman. Then realization of the situation came to him, and he chuckled. This indeed was a miraculous solution to his dilemma—provided he could succeed in overtaking Johnny.

But before setting out after Mr. Skidd, Opus lifted the bound and gagged figure of the unhappy Garnish and placed her under a tree by the roadside. Then he lumbered into the woods.

Johnny had progressed scarcely a hundred feet. He had plastered himself against a pine trunk, where he shivered and listened. For a few seconds he heard nothing—then he heard much. Most distinctly there came to his ears the sound of a human figure crashing through the forest. Mr. Skidd's expression became one of unutterable terror.

Spurred On by Horror.

"O, whoa is me!" he whispered. Then, of their own volition, his feet commenced to transport him elsewhere.

Opus heard the resumption of Johnny's flight. He desired to call through the woodland, disclosing his identity to his quarry, but he knew that voices traveled far in the woods and was fearful lest Garnish also hear his message of identification. Whereupon he kept his lips shut tight and proceeded to give vigorous chase.

Johnny's progress was fast, furious and indefinite. Spurred by horror, he ran full tilt into large and unyielding tree trunks; tripped over malicious roots and tore his clothes on aggressive brambles. Opus, chasing after, fared scarcely more fortunately. They ran in circles, to the accompaniment of groans, grunts and subdued but enthusiastic profanity. Occasionally Opus risked a shout, but each of these vociferations served only to lend to Mr. Skidd an urge to remove himself still farther from his nemesis.

It was an epic chase. Johnny's breath was coming in short, agonized gasps; his shirt was in shreds, his nether garments tattered. The fact that the supposed bandit was pursuing thus relentlessly informed Johnny that there was personal rancor in the chase. Unquestionably the desperado was intent upon eliminating the Skidd family.

In his terror, Mr. Skidd forgot Garnish, forgot his elegant job with Midnight—forgot everything save that he had no ambition whatsoever to terminate abruptly his term of enjoyment on earth. Sobbing and gasping he collided with obstacles up to the ultimate ounce of his strength. Then he collapsed.

Within an alarmingly decreasing radius, the sound of Opus' pursuit drummed in his ears. And now Mr. Randall was almost upon him. To Mr. Skidd there came the desperation of the cornered rodent, and he rose to his feet, braced himself against a tree and doubled his puny fists.

Out of the night came a huge shape. Mr. Skidd emitted a shrill cry and launched his frail figure upon the massive frame of Opus Randall. Terror gave strength and the two wallops which he implanted upon the disgusted countenance of Mr. Randall were worthy a man much larger and more powerful.

Opus grunted with pained surprise. Then he flung out two large arms and imprisoned the wriggling figure of his horrified friend. He attempted to speak, but Johnny's head crashed squarely into his lips.

There ensued a battle which was as inspiring as it was brief. Finally Mr. Skidd sank to earth, a groaning and defeated person in whose ears there sounded the melancholy strains of Gabriel's trumpet.

Yo' Going to Be a Hero.

Fearing a return of the little supervisor's combativeness, Opus threw himself on top of the diminutive warrior, and uttered a remark.

"You dawg-gone idjit!"

Johnny was offended.

"I ain't so."

"You is. This is Opus Randall!"

A thrill of delight shot through the heart of Mr. Skidd. Then a vague resentment flooded his bosom.

"If tha's true," he moaned, "git up off me."

Mr. Randall complied immediately, and then, briefly and graphically, he explained the situation. Johnny found difficulty in comprehending.

"You—you mean my wife wasn't really kidnaped?"

"Nossuh. It was all in fun."

"An' there wasn't no real bandit?"

"Nope. I was him."

"An' you didn't shoot no shot at me?"

"Uh-uh, Johnny. I just blowed a tire."

"Golla!" murmured Mr. Skidd, almost hysterical with relief. "What is I gwine do now?"

Opus spoke earnestly.

"You is gwine do plenty, what I mean. Things has been kind of tough fo' you an' me bofe—not even forgettin' Garnish. You can take it fum me, Johnny, that kidnapin' a cullud lady ain't no fun. But the point is that she is all tied up an' sittin' by the road. You look like Manslaughter had just slapped you in the face an' run away. But, kid, you got the world by the tail."

"World ain't got no tail."

"It has, too. Thing fo' you to do now is to be a hero."

"Nothin' doin'!" declared Johnny firmly. "I has heroed plenty fo' one night."

"This ain't got no danger. Always you has been henpecked. All right—immedjitly you come waltzin' out of these woods all tore up like you is, an' yo' face all bluggy . . . an' you strut over to Garnish an' unloose her bonds. Then you notifry her that you most got kilt by the bandit, which same you finally beat up an' lef' fo' mos' dead. An' what happens then?"

"I dunno. What?"

"She flings her arms about you, an' says you is wonderful, an' right away ev'ything has changed in yo' fambly."

"How?"

"'Cause befo' this you ain't never been a man. But if you can beat up anybody which can kidnap Garnish, she is gwine look at you with new eyes. An' if you take my advice, you is goin' to play this across the board. Tomorrow mawnin' you is gwine tell her right straight out that you has got to have mo' free time an' that there is a poker party at Lawyer Chew's house which you is goin' to."

Breakfast in Bed.

Mr. Skidd's eyes were shining. "Durned if you ain't right, Opus. An' with Garnish bein' all filled up with gratitude to me, she is boun' to do like I requesses."

Fulsomely he expressed his gratitude to Mr. Randall, and somewhat uncertainly he commenced staggering through the woods toward the spot where Garnish Skidd was successfully suffering.

Johnny played his rôle magnificently, and the gratitude of Mrs. Skidd was almost pathetic. Even though her own nerves had been rudely shocked, her solicitude for the battered Johnny was truly royal. She took him to their hotel room, laved his bumps and bruises and let him clearly understand that his heroism had inaugurated a new era of domestic felicity in the Skidd household.

Johnny slumbered peacefully that night. When he waked the sun was streaming in the window. He was alone—but only for a moment. Then the door opened and Garnish entered.

She was bearing a tray which had been obtained from a restaurant downstairs. She smiled affectionately at her now idolized husband and placed a succulent repast before him: four poached eggs, a pot of steaming coffee, hot biscuits, a lamb chop and a cigar with a large gold band.

"Heroes never oughtn't to get up fo' breakfas', honey," she announced.

He was amazed. "You mean just this mawnin' or ev'y mawnin'?"

"I mean ev'y mawnin', sugarfoots." Her voice trembled with contrition. "I ain't never treated you right, Johnny. But fum now on Ise gwine be diff'ent."

His heart sang. And since she had declared his independence, he figured that this was the psychological moment to insure his future happiness. He struck straight from the shoulder.

"Garnish," he announced, "us finished that pitcher last night. But tonight I crave to go to Lawyer Chew's house where the boys is havin' a swell poker party."

He eargerly awaited her answer, knowing that this was the ultimate test inasmuch as she always had opposed his card playing desires.

"Honey boy," she said soothingly, "there ain't nothin' I woul'n't do fo' you—'cept one thing."

"Yeh? What's that one thing, Garnish?"

Mrs. Skidd smiled affectionately.

"I ain't never gwine let you leave me at night again, Johnny. I need you to protect me from bandits."

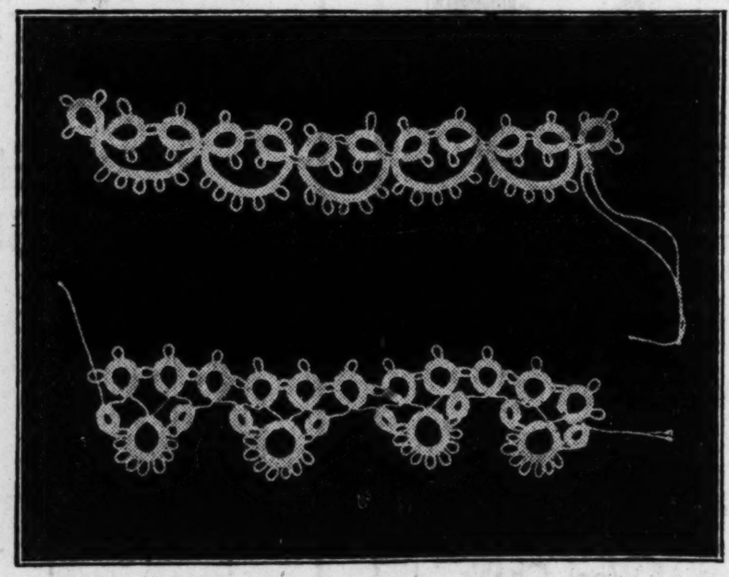
The Sorrows of Tweetyman

Needlework

By Clotilde

These Tatting Designs Are Easy to Execute And Make Pretty Edgings for Doilies, Tray Cloths, Guest Towels and Lingerie.



What is your sewing problem? Do you have trouble in following a pattern? Do you find difficulty in making a skirt hang evenly or making a sleeve that doesn't twist? If there is anything you would like to know about these or other problems of needlework write to Clotilde. The Tribune, Chicago, inclosing a stamped, addressed envelope if a personal reply is desired.

TWO edgings made of tatting are shown today, one being suitable for insertion as well as edging. Tatting is fascinating work to watch as well as to do, and these designs are suitable for many things—doilies, tray cloths, guest towels, and lingerie.

For the upper design take mercerized crochet cotton No. 30. This one is made with two threads.

Shuttle thread, 5 double stitches, picot; 4 double stitches, picot; 4 double stitches, picot; 5 double stitches, close.

Now, make the second circle the same way, then tie spool thread between both rings, and on this thread with your shuttle make 5 double stitches, picot; 3 double stiches, picot; 3 double stitches, picot; 3 double stitches, picot; 3 double stitches, picot. This makes the lower part.

Then drop spool thread and with the shuttle thread make 5 double stitches, picot; 4 double stitches; join to the center of the other ring; 4 double stitches, picot; 5 double stitches, close.

Make another ring and close. Then pick up your spool thread and proceed as before, 5 double stitches, picot; 3 double stitches, picot; etc.

The lower design is made with the shuttle thread only. Five double stitches, picot; 5 double stitches, close. With this ring at the bottom make 5 double stitches, picot; 4 double stitches picot; 4 double stitches, picot; 5 double stitches, close. Then with this ring at the bottom make 5 double stitches, join; 2 double stitches, picot. Do this 8 times. Five double stitches, close. Then with this ring at the bottom make 5 double stitches, join; 4 double stitches, picot; 4 double stitches, picot; 5 double stitches, close; 5 double stitches, join; 5 double stitches, close.

It is important that the circle being made should be always at the top.

A Head—But Not, Curly.

On a trip to the west coast with a 7 year old child, we occupied lower berth No. 8. Late one night the child awakened and wanted a drink.

We walked down the long aisle between curtained berths. When returning, she ran ahead and soon disappeared into her berth. But mother was not so fortunate. In the folds of a curtain next to ours, No. 10 had arranged itself into a seeming 8.

So at No. 8 [?] mother stopped, reached her hand in the direction of the pillow to rumple the child's curls as usual. Horrors! Instead of curls, she patted a bald head. Instantly on snapped a light and a big fist reached for something. Quicker than any move in her life she tumbled in berth No. 8, covered up her head, not daring to move, and with visions of guns, porters and trouble. Nothing more happened, however. E. J. L.

Plenty of Prunes.

Incapaciated for business by a chronic illness, my husband, anxious to help all he could decided to learn to cook so that he might have dinner ready when I returned from work. He soon became quite an adept in getting the meals.

On my way to the loop each day I ordered the supplies. One morning there was a special sale of prunes in five and ten pound bags and I sent home one of the larger bags. Later in the day hubby called the office to ask me how to cook the prunes.

When I reached home at 6 o'clock I found him literally buried in prunes. Every kettle in the house and every dish he could commandeer was filled with cooked prunes and he was still struggling with the overflow. He had cooked the entire ten pounds, putting them in a large preserve kettle and added too much water. Naturally, the prunes swelled.

In spite of the mess I sat down and laughed until I was weak, not only at the funny looking "pruny" kitchen, but at the worry and chagrin on the cook's face and even today I laugh every time I think of the prunes.

Pores, Oily Skin Had Me Frantic

Try this New Hollywood Recipe for a Beautiful Skin

Out in Hollywood they have a wonderful recipe for a lotion that quickly reduces large pores, removes blackheads and makes the skin nice and smooth.

The very minute you pat it on the face it gets down deep into the skin and cleans out the dirt. It removes blackheads, closes the pores and makes the skin smooth, good-looking and youthfully fresh. You'll notice, too, that the skin is not oily or disfigured with perspiration that streaks make-up.

If you want a smooth, soft, beautiful skin free from large pores, blackheads, crow's feet and oiliness, just get 3 ounces of Orchard White from your druggist and mix it with the juice of 2 lemons. Then you have a full quarter-pint of the finest lotion you have ever used. Try it.

Note: During the summer months this amazing lotion is indispensable to the outdoor girl. It keeps the skin smooth and free from freckles, and guards against that leathery, aged-worn look caused by sun and wind.

Peasants Taste Power in Spain and Find It Good

Orderly Socialists Occupy Key Positions.

This is the seventh of a series of articles on Spain by Jay Allen of The Tribune's foreign staff. In the series he tells of the political and economical problems now confronting this ancient and romantic country, including the movement, which he terms "really formidable," against the king. The next will appear in an early issue.

By Jay Allen.

VILLA DE DON FADRIQUE, Province of Toledo, Spain.—[Special Correspondence.]—"The new detachment of Guardia Civiles arrived at dusk and along about two in the morning a dozen of the simpler comrades woke me up and asked:

"'Do you want their heads now, before it is too late?'

"I told them I did not want their heads now or ever."

It is the secretary of the Agrupacion Socialista of the village speaking.

"The simpler comrades are apt to believe in direct action."

He grinned and the others laughed.

It was at lunch. There were ten men, all Socialists, around the table. The women of the house were busy serving the excellent lunch. A fine rich soup with a little touch of saffron, an enormous platter of baby lamb chops, crisp white hearts of lettuce, big loaves of hard bread made of white bolted flour and salted, fat ripe figs, and a sharp red wine.

It was cool in the white walled dining room, but through the door and down a corridor, red tiled, you could see a riot of sunlight in the patio. Blazing as in the white streets of the village and over the vineyards that stretch out for miles over the plain of La Mancha.

Class Hatred.

Villa de Don Fadrique is only sixteen miles from El Toboso. Like it, except drearier. Not a tree in the place. It has no pleasing legend of a Dulcinea, but it does have a flourishing Socialist party, with 500 paying members, that is the pride of the party chiefs in Madrid. But not of the solid citizenry of the village.

There is hatred here. Laborers and landowners dispute the sidewalk. People pass without speaking. Coming down the street a while ago from the station, two good ladies of the town going home from mass gave Pablo Carpintero, secretary of the Agrupacion, and his companion a wide berth. They seemed to bristle in their black.

But everything pleasant around the Carpintero table. The guests two, your correspondent and the other quite a personage in the political and literary world in Madrid, whose picture you often see in Socialist homes.

The cloth was fine, but there were only three glasses and not enough forks. Apparently only the host and his two guests were supposed to be eating, but the other dipped in, borrowing the great man's glass with charming smiles to drink sparingly of the wine, which, one gathered, was something choice. Grinning when they took up a lamb chop with their fingers, of necessity. The hostess, a fine type, built along the lines of Dona Antonia of El Toboso, but with her gray hair bobbed, was in no way bothered, apologized for nothing, treated the personage with fine courtesy but no humility. She was the first to suggest that the lamb chops were much better than you get in Madrid, where apparently people put up with lots of inferior things.

The butcher, a lank fellow, with wavy, black hair, a square jaw, and a large, sensitive mouth, beamed and said that the burgesas, the bourgeois ladies, were of the same opinion and and that, believe him, with every pound of meat they got a pound of socialism. "I will win them away from the priests yet."

His novia—he called her "comrade"—made a face at this. A strapping girl whose bobbed hair and Marxian frequentations are the scandal of the village. She seemed to feel that the burgesas were probably not so keen about the ideas of Herr Marx as the handsome disciple behind the counter.

Political Minded.

Admirable people, these peasants, like those in El Toboso. Cut out of the same cloth. As courtly, but more talkative. They are disturbing with their keen questions

"Why, then, is there so little socialism in America?"

". . . ."

"Yes, but in Spain there is not enough for all and we work hard, too. In America if a man worked from the age of eight until he could work no more and had to live his old age on his children, would you not consider something wrong?"

They tell about how they have cut down on drinks and tobacco to put the money in their building, the Casa del Pueblo, finest thing in the town, next to the church and the city hall, and keep referring to the inhabitants of Villacanas, five miles away, with a population of 15,000 people of whom 8,000 dwell in caves, "as Chinese."

Why Chinese? Because it seems they take the "opium" of the cacique and of the church, alcohol, and religion.

Their ideas are sturdy. Their Castilian fine, but they are apt to use jargon picked out of Socialist manuals.

Eager questions about politics in Madrid. When the elections? The king, will he have to go?

In Villa Don Fadrique an interesting phenomenon has taken place. The peasant has tasted power. Through his own village agrupacion, here a model, and his affiliations with the highly vigorous national organization. Primo de Rivera tolerated the Socialists, alone of all the political organizations. He used them. And they used him, strengthening their ranks during the six years he was in power. Now they are the only organized political group, 13,000 members plus the affiliated general laborers' union (Union General de Trabajadores) of 200,000.

The peasant in Don Fadrique no

Paris Thrills Members of Mantle Party

After Rainy England, France Truly Alluring.

[This the fourth phase of the Drama league junket through the theaters of Europe takes Mr. Mantle and his tourists out of England, into France, and through Paris.]

By Burns Mantle.

PARIS, in July.—[Special Correspondence.]—We came up from the Shakespeare country, again through the rain. It was the fourteenth day of our pilgrimage and during the last eight I think we looked the sun full in the face but two times. Still, everybody was and is cheerful. It distressed the natives for us to say rain was what we expected of London in July, but it was I went trotting into town to get me a bur'b'ry, and after that let it rain.

I wanted to see an English music hall again, so I took Peg, aged 10, to the Coliseum. She liked the vaudeville, but couldn't understand why they called it Piccadilly Circus when there wasn't any circus. Furthermore, she confided to me that while she liked London she thought New York was much handier. And she is going to be sure, she says, to tell her children not to go to see Mme. Tussaud's waxworks. At the Coliseum, which was packed, the vaudeville was as international as it is at the Palace in New York. Bob Hall, American, introduced Young Stribling, the American box fighter, who was sitting in a box, with many adjectives declaring the friendliness of one country for the other and the promise that Mr. Stribling's fight with Mr. Scott would not end in a foul.

The Enthoven Collection.

A London Sunday isn't anything to cause great excitement, being devoted to the purposes for which the churchly fathers intended, but it does give sight-seeing pilgrims a fine chance at the museums. We were particularly interested in the Enthoven collection of old playbills at the Victoria and Albert museum. It dates from 1738 to 1856, if you must have dates, and is as full of interest to the theater fans as any collection in the world. Mrs. Gabrielle Enthoven is still in charge, and though we missed her and the playbills Sunday, those interested found both on Monday. There are 80,000 bills in her collection and columns would be necessary to bring them before you.

Sixteenth day. Another get-away. You had but to mention that this was the last day in London to send the women scurrying for the shops. I suggested that it would be wise and probably economical to put off souvenir and gift buying until the last weeks, but the opportunity was new and the shops alluring. As bags bulged the courier frowned.

Those with no money went to the British museum looking for a collection of masks. Found part of it. Asked for more and the guide insisted, superiorly, that what we probably meant was the wax images at Mme. Tussaud's. We froze him with hauteur.

We had agreed that museum tours should be made solo, to avoid the "O, did you see this!" and the "O, do come here!" sort of thing, which is always distressing. I found myself being put out of the gorgeous reading room twice. Once because I had no entrance ticket and once because I was walking about in place of standing still. The last time I let the guard think it over until he, true to his English type, grew a bit ashamed of himself. Then he voluntarily escorted me through a private door into the galleries surrounding the reading room [with the largest dome in Europe, save for St. Peter's] and there showed me where, in all-steel galleries, most of the 5,000,000 books in the library are stored.

We went to "Cynara" in the evening. Gerald du Maurier, aging but still grandly fascinating as a middle aged English husband charmed by a beautiful shop girl after his wife had deserted him for a six weeks' duty tour with her sister. Gladys Cooper is the wife, and still a beautiful woman. The supreme beauty of the English theater for years, like all English blondes, she ages slowly

Catchy Music in Vital Opera, 'Bartered Bride'

Folk Tunes Enliven This Work of Smetana's.

By Edward Moore.

THE only trouble with "The Bartered Bride" since Mr. Eckstein's forces put it on the other night has been the way some of its music keeps coming up in the memory. Some of the tunes are persistent to the point of annoyance.

It is a pretty good test of the value of a piece, at that. Here is a work that was first performed sixty-four years ago, that has never been performed often enough hereabouts to become well known, and yet turns out to be amazingly vital.

It is not entirely even in its grain. You can pick out the good and bad spots with little trouble. Much of it is founded upon folk music, and those folk tunes are as alive now as they were when the opera was new. Occasionally, however, Bedrich Smetana would seem to have had ambitions to get a little grander than folk music would allow him to be. Those are the sections that show age.

If people only knew it, Smetana set the stage for modern jazz in an extended and developed style. From this time on, I shall be entirely impervious to all arguments about the monotony of the set pattern of jazz and the impossibility of making it interesting beyond more than its sixteen measure form. For the polka is more monotonus in its rhythm, more rigid in its pattern, more unyielding in development. Yet consider the polka in "The Bartered Bride," so brilliantly danced by Ruth Page, Blake Scott, and their associates. Quite without reference to its performance, it is a small masterpiece of music. And it is as little impossible to make small masterpieces out of jazz. All that is needed is a composer as good as Smetana.

Relives Circus Days.

There were a lot of points in the performance that had to be omitted for one reason and another. The circus in the third act was one, as diverting a scene as has appeared in opera in a long time. They say that one of the principal performers was one of Ravinia's electricians, a circus graduate himself. When the opportunity came, he dug out his circus costume and went through his old routine with great enthusiasm and certainly with great effect. And Margery Maxwell did an enchanting bit as the tight rope girl, and there were clowns and a strong man—a strong boy, too—and the only need was to import an elephant or two.

Meanwhile the performance went its merry gait, holding its pace and its color to the end. It was a great cast. Elisabeth Rethberg and Mario Chamlee turned out to be actors of much ability as well as ideal singers. Louis D'Angelo was a comic marriage broker such as the world has seldom seen. And as for Marek Windheim, he created a few new standards for what can be done with the comic in opera, raising stuttering goofiness to the level of a fine art.

It is hoped that "The Bartered Bride" will be a permanent item in the répertoire. At any rate, it is on again this week, which registers as cheering news.

An Original Program.

One of the most original examples of program making ever taken up by an opera company is announced for Thursday night, and in advance it looks as though its attractiveness equaled its originality. It is in two parts: the first a song recital by Elisabeth Rethberg with the Chicago Symphony orchestra; the second, the fourth act of "Les Huguenots."

Sister Drama's Pride Jolted by Mr. Talkie's Job

"Squawking" Premieres Hurt Old Gal.

By Tom Pettey.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—Mr. Talkie again has beaten his poor relation to the punch. While old Sister Drama, who had become somewhat of a huzzy this summer, was sulking from reprimands for her sins our young mechanical friend, whose life is as transparent as celluloid, opened the new season with more than his customary arrogant bravado.

"Hell's Angels" swooped in from Hollywood and parked their war planes in two theaters for a twin première. Billed as "the first multimillion dollar talking picture," two theaters seemed hardly adequate.

John Barrymore fights that "ole debbil sea" in "Moby Dick" at the Warner's Hollywood theater and it is a whale of a picture.

Joe Cook in "Rain or Shine" is doing his share to block traffic near the double crossroads of the world, and even Harold Bell Wright contributed to what the newspaper advertisements termed "a gala occasion" by conceiving "Eyes of the World," an outdoor picture. "Abraham Lincoln" will be with us next week and from then on new pictures will be popping out like the stars after a rainstorm.

This week Broadway became a zoo. For some obscure reason a little elephant led the way into Joe Cook's show; cardboard whales were in evidence further up the alley; parrots chattered across the street, and a white pony draped in lettered canvas paraded the trolley tracks. It is just Mr. Talkie's idea of publicity.

GOOD MORNING!

This is the sad story of a lady who married a Colbrook. Colbrook, in the present instance, signifies a Mean Man.

He died, this rich, horrid Colbrook, leaving behind him six bratty young Colbrooks and a dear little chap named Bill—who is his mother's joy and pride. Bill doesn't look like a Colbrook and he doesn't act like a Colbrook. His brothers and sisters call him a "hooligan" and his father had nastily asserted before the hand of God descended upon the mean man and gathered him unto his fathers that Bill was, indeed, no son of his.

The picture is an adaptation of the play by Tom Barry, which, I understand, had quite a run on the stage. It tells the story of a dauntless and adoring mother who, through endeavoring to provide luxuries as well as necessities for her children, finds herself at the mercy of creditors and about to lose the lovely home in which she has nested her young.

Bill Saves the Day.

It had seemed so easy for the defunct Colbrook to make profitable turnovers on his investments that his widow had tried her hand at speculation with disastrous results. The six Colbrook-y offspring gaze at her with the look of a love grown tired, and upbraid her harshly for her lax management of the money left by their father. But Bill—little Bill who thinks his mother is Just Right—is her stanch defender, and she turns hungrily to him for cheer and comfort. Bill it is who, in the long run, saves the day for the family—only I'd rather not tell you how, if you don't mind.

When matters are at their worst there arrives on the scene Mr. Colbrook's spinster sister Caroline, who, following a plan laid out by her late brother, seeks to alienate the six children who resemble him from their mother and take them to live with her. She'll succeed, you're sure, for twelve ears listen readily to her insinuations against a gallant improvident lady. BUT, this same gallant improvident lady is, you must remember, a mother who loves her children. A gentle creature who suddenly, to the astonishment and dismay of the interloping Aunt Caroline, turns tigress . . . ! Well——?

I thought Belle Bennett's characterization of Mrs. Colbrook an honest, believable, and at times intensely appealing one. Her attitude toward the young folks playing with her is that of one who understands the fancies and foibles of youth. She has been a mother, so this is not surprising. Her scenes with Bill are delightful. Bill, as played by curly headed Leon Janney, is one of the main reasons why you should see this picture. He's a lamb!

Cast Is Excellent.

The six dissenting Colbrooks are well interpreted by a smart covey headed by Marion Nixon, who, as the hard hearted, self-dramatizing eldest daughter does excellent work. Blanche Frederici makes Aunt Caroline a lady you'd love to lay out, thus completely fulfilling, I imagine, the idea advanced in the script. Richard Tucker as a sympathetic banker has a satisfactory entrance.

Mrs. Colbrook's explanation of how

Stage History from Financial Point of View

"Equity" Prints Study of Theater Economics.

By Charles Collins.

IT seems that we must wait for Labor day for plays that are worth writing about. ["Love Technique," with or without Lou Tellegen, doesn't count.] But here, at any rate, is a new book with a special appeal to collectors of stage lore:

"The Economic History of the Legitimate Theater," by Alfred L. Bernheim.

It is not yet a book, as a matter of fact, but merely the first installment of a serial in "Equity," organ of the Actors' Equity association. But when it attains the dignity of binding and covers it will be worthy of a place on any theatrical shelf. It represents a piece of exploration into virgin territory; it is the first attempt to write the history of the American stage from the modern economic point of view.

Which causes me to reflect that if the "legitimate" drama should be on its way downhill toward the sunset, as Bernard Shaw has cruelly suggested, it will still have eternal life. If it should be preparing to take its place in the records of Homo Sapiens along with such extinct amusements as gladiatorial combats, knightly tournaments, falconry, Maypole dancing, bicycles built for two and mah jong, its ghost will haunt the libraries of the world, where the copious memoirs of its glorious two thousand years have been stored. This forlorn spirit will commune with patient scholars, disturbing their research with hints of ancient revelry, and hinting to their humdrum pens sly sarcasms about the inferiority, so far as entertainment goes, of radio, talkies, television, and whatever other scientific toys may be invented.

Written to Order.

Bernheim's work was undertaken on commission from the Actors' Equity association. That organization, in the course of its general campaign for the welfare of the theater, discovered that there was no accurate record in print of past or present business conditions. Of works dealing with the theater as an art, or a synthesis of arts, there was no end; but the story of the stage as an economic institution had never been written. So Equity called in Mr. Bernheim of the Labor Bureau, Inc., of New York, and told him to go to work. Six years before he had made a survey of vaudeville for Equity, whose officers were therefore confident that he would go out after the facts and bring them all home, dragging their lessons behind him. On this study he spent not less than five years, burrowing through mountains of printed pages and interviewing all the old inhabitants of the land of Thespis who were capable of saying something more than "Did you see me when I played Hamlet?"

Mr. Bernheim writes clearly—which is equivalent to saying that he thinks clearly. He brought to his task none of the sentimentalism of the theatrical journalist, none of the artistic theories of the professional critic. He started from the point of view that the theater—i. e., the production, interpretation and exploitation of plays—is a matter involving the income and outgo of dollars and cents. "The theater," he said, "cannot escape being commercial. It must struggle for its existence in a commercial world; it must play the game according to the rules, and play it well."

The first and second chapters of this work, published in the July number of "Equity," deal with the characteristics of the early American theater, in its financing and business management. They are vivid with interest for any connoisseur of Americana, and they whet the appetite for the sections to come, when Mr. Bernheim will get his teeth into such meaty subjects as the era of the Syndicate, the rise of the Shuberts, and the long, losing battle with the cinema.

Here are two "first times" culled from his data: The first play written by a native American dramatist to be acted by professionals was the "The Prince of Parthia," by Thomas Godfrey Jr., given in Philadelphia in 1767; and the first native born American actor of record, who broke into the playbills in 1768, was named Goodman.

Promised Premieres.

The schedule for the opening of the new stage season in Chicago is still incomplete. The Studebaker has already begun operation with Lou Tellegen in a comedy called "Love Technique," which is reported to have improved after an unpromising opening Next Sunday night "The House of Fear," a mystery melodrama, will be staged at the Playhouse, and Mae West will reveal "Sex," which shocked the New York constabulary, at the Garrick.

"Young Sinners" will come to the Apollo following "Sisters of the Chorus," on Sunday evening, Aug. 31. "Lost Sheep" will compel the Selwyn to turn up its lights the same evening, or else the night before. "The Last Mile" will appear at the Harris on Labor day, with its full original cast. These three plays are New York hits of the past season, and they guarantee that the month of September will have a successful debut along the Randolph Street Rialto.

The opening of the Grand Opera house, thrice postponed, is marked down on the calendar for Sept. 8, when "Artists and Models," revised and improved after its recent New York run, will be staged there. Plans for the Great Northern and the Majestic, Shubert theaters usually devoted to ambitious musical shows, are still vague. "Three Little Girls," a brilliant operetta, is, however, a possibility for the Great Northern. The Adelphi, which is under the directorship of A. H. Woods, has not yet confessed what it has in mind.

The Blackstone looks forward to the beginning of the Theater Guild's season with Shaw's "The Apple Cart." A September engagement of Walker Whiteside, in an unidentified play, is longer has to bow to the cacique, whom here he hates. He knows he has the party behind him, and every one in Spain knows that the Socialists occupy the key positions, as a general strike at a difficult moment might very well precipitate events. So he is keenly interested in politics. He has a stake in the game.

An American in Spain

By Jay Allen.

"I told the alcalde," said Carpintero, "that it was a mistake to try to run us into earth. As Socialists we are orderly. Kill the party and you will have communists and syndicalists on your hands, direct actionists like the simple comrades I mentioned."

Later in the Casa del Pueblo the personage from Madrid talked informally, speeches being banned. People sat around and smoked. "Communism" has an unpleasant sound in Spanish ears; so he merely talked of what the "people" are doing in Russia. Rather simply, of land divided, palaces turned into hospitals, schools. You could actually see this simple gospel working into some of the harder skulls. The speaker happened to be sincere. Had he not been it would have been as easy.

Concentrated Wealth.

What's wrong in Don Fadrique? Low wages, work uncertain. But so they are in El Toboso. The explanation is that here the land is owned by the few. Eighty per cent of the inhabitants of this village own nothing, not even the houses they live in.

The bulk of the land is owned by five or six landlords, one a nobleman whom nobody here has ever seen. His overseer occupies the handsome old house, one of the many around Spain that belong to the family. A weather worn coat of arms above the fine oak doors studded with great bosses. They are swung open and in the arcaded patio you see a huge brick colored wine jar, eight feet tall at least, on its side against a white wall over which wistaria falls.

Things got bad in Don Fadrique during the harvest of 1927, a bad year. Socialists leading a wage agitation were jailed. In 1929 the land owners decided to hire no Socialists. Harvesters were brought in from Murcia. Carpintero and his friends had to seek work elsewhere. Hunger was known in many homes that winter. People helped each other and some of the "bourgeois" ladies were very kind, it seems.

It was during these lean months that they turned to and built the Casa del Pueblo. They are planting trees, the only ones in the town. They have a typewriter for their propaganda and want a moving picture machine. The nearest movie is in Villacanas.

You mention El Toboso. "Yes, indeed, a little paradise, but rather small." They laugh.

"They think we're devils."

More laughter. Castilian laughter does not come easy, but when it does it sparkles like water from a deep well. "And then," seriously, "of course in El Toboso they own their land."

Take Galicia.

To the cathedral of Santiago de Campostela, where St. James is supposed to lie, pilgrims came in the Middle Ages, chanting the "Humiliadero." Few come any more. But Gallegan mothers bring their babies and knock their tender heads against the forehead of el santo de los croques.

To make them smart.

50,000 Emigrants.

But rare is the Gallego smart enough to beat the system in the hills of Galicia. The soil is worn out, overcrowded. The big landlord and the hierarchy of little landlords under him let at the terms they want. And the foros with which the land was burdened by forgotten kings. By virtue of these the tenant pays in addition to his rental a tribute in kind. So heavy that many a Gallego has to earn 80 per cent of his sustenance at other jobs.

So three or four times a month from Vigo and Corunna the emigrant ships go out. Beneath decks in noisome holds a patient industrious people taking the road to exile. The poetry of ancient Spain was written in the soft blurred Galician tongue, like Portuguese. Some of it still is. Rosalia Castro has written:

"este vaise e equel vaise
e todos, todos se van.
. . . . . .
"This one goes and that one.
All, all go away.
O Galicia, without your men
Who will work your soil?"

The accents are tragic. It is a tragedy not for Galicia only, but all Spain.

Emigration diminished during the dictatorship, but in 1928 there were still close to 50,000 who went away. Half were women and children. Of the men 10,000 were listed as agricultural workers and 10,000 significantly "without aptitudes." Most came from Galicia. Fifty thousand is about the number who left annually during the reign of Philip IV. It rose to 200,000 in 1910. Spain once expelled her most industrious subjects, the Moors and the Jews. She still does in a sense.

"The Spaniard in South America works like a fiend," says Prof. de los Rios, who has been to see.

Money and Brains Needed.

But there is proof there. They come back with money, or send it. To Spain from the Argentine alone come every year 500,000,000 pesetas, not a corruptive stream as of old. Wherever in Galicia you see a fine new home or a new school you know that some Gallego struck it rich across the ocean. Emigrants from Galicia, Asturias, and Santander protect 750 schools and have spent more than 45,000,000 pesetas in recent years. In the district of Llanes there are 38 schools built by emigrants to Mexico and Chile who have formed an association of 100,000 persons. Not all are rich, but determined that little Gallegos shall not have to depend only on el santo de los croques. There are 48 similar associations in South America. "Indianos" built them, the inhabitants will tell you, pointing to the new structures.

Food for thought on the organization of life in old Spain. Economists say she could only become the richest country in Europe if money and brains were put in her mines, her agriculture, her industry. But strong arms are needed, too.

In Castile there is, of course—this being Spain—quite a different problem. Where in Galicia and all the humid costal regions it is mostly a matter long complicated by leases and foros, here in the plains of Andalusia and Estremadura, dry farming regions, it is one of huge holdings in the hands of a few aristocrats and the rest divided on short leases to tenants or among peasant landowners in plots too small to support a family, much less permit of economic operation.

In the mournful fields of Castile there may be grain or bulls that it pleases a duke to raise that his colors may be carried into the plazas de toros, or nothing.

Ninety per cent of the landowners in the fertile wheat growing province own plots so small that they earn less than a peseta a day from them. In a third of Spain where a check has been made some few hundreds of landowners earn more than eight pesetas a day, 12,000 between eight and five, 147,710 less than five, and 847,548 less than one peseta.

A Peseta a Day.

They live off the soil. The family burro provides transportation at a low mileage rate. They can pay the doctor, as most do, in wheat. But clothes, education for the children, not to mention radios, plows, and whatnot are paid for in solid duros. Taking account of the fact that they live on the soil, a peseta a day is still less than the common laborer in the towns can command. And these are the landowners. Consider the millions who own nothing, who rent precariously or live from hand to mouth here in the Villa de Don Fadrique, in caves in Villacanas, who roam the plains of Andalusia. . . .

Take these southern and western plains, Estremadura and Andalusia. The former the province of the Conquistadors, of Pizarro, Cortes, Balboa. A blight seems to have fallen on it. People loll about filthy villages. You go for miles seeing no more sometimes than a ruined cottage, or a mansion for this is the region of the vast estate.

In Jerez de los Caballeros, a fine old walled town, I found a typical situation. The land is in the hands of slightly more than 4 per cent of the population. Mostly aristocrats and so efficiently absentee that when the municipality wrote to them for funds for a statue to a native son, by name Balboa, he who stood silent on a peak in Darien and glimpsed the Pacific, none answered.

Foreign operators of mines in Caceres, nearby, assure me that the Estremaduran works like a nigger when he has anything to do. But in Jerez they have to depend on seasonal demands from the big estates, which are haphazardly run, or rent small properties.

The Joys of Farming.

Consider the joys of tenant farming in Spain.

Back in the nineties five peasants got together and rented an unpromising tract from the duke of Fernan Nunez, one of Spain's greatest aristocrats, and with sweat and fertilizer made something of it. The duke thought a five year lease ample, but agreed to renewals. Last year, when the term ran out, came along two brothers, proprietors of a sizeable estate nearby, and got the duke of Montellano, who now owns the property, to transfer to them the lease on these now fertile plots. And so 26 farmers, descendants of the original five, became laborers again, losing their houses, the fruit of four decades of weary effort.

Of the 80,000 acres that comprise the municipality of Fregenal de la Sierra, two-thirds are in the hands of absentee noblemen. The city council got together and decided that the community would be more prosperous if the land were worked. They raised 800,000 pesetas with which the alcalde went about trying to buy plots for various enterprising peasant groups which were ready to work them. Nobody wanted to sell.

In Andalusia the situation is evidently worse, because there you find the most unrest, but statistics are simply not available. There are regions in Spain, Catalonia, Valencia, for instance, where the land is reasonably divided, and these are true paradises, El Tobosos on a bigger scale.

But not so in two-thirds at least of Spain. And the emigrant ships go out.

Yet only four-tenths of Spain is under cultivation, and only one-tenth is really hopeless. Except in certain regions Spain is far from being overcrowded, with a density of population half that of Italy, a third that of France.

Much of this four-tenths is poor soil. But up to date dry farming methods in the poor soil of Valencia increased the yield of corn from two and a half times to above the average for the more fertile regions of northern Europe. Irrigation programs are being pushed. Spain's 33,000,000 acres of nonirrigated land yield 13 to 14 bushels of wheat per acre; her irrigated area, 1,500,000 acres, to which another 3,000,000 could be added, 24 to 25 bushels.

Agrarian Problems.

There are many projects. El Sol in Madrid says the evil of latifundia or large holdings should be solved by confiscation of lands that are unutilized, after proper indemnity, and their distribution to farm laborers and agrarian syndicates. The latter is an idea with which most students of the question like to play with. They argue that the land could thus be economically operated in large units, and they invoke traditions of municipal ownership of land which prevailed in Iberia before the Romans came and still exists in certain regions.

There are even laws. By royal decree of 1927, promulgated with a flourish, peasants were to be settled on all large estates that were found to be lying idle. Interior colonization. Why should peasants have to go to the pampas? Great enthusiasm. The state would advance 80 per cent of the purchase price, to be repaid over 25 years. In three years 12,000 peasants have been placed on a total acreage which, by a coincidence, is just about what the duchess of Fernan Nunez owns in Jerez de los Caballeros, 20,000 acres, one of her many properties.

For a dictator to make exhaustive studies and even issue decrees is one thing. But for any dictator in the Spain of today actually to start carving up the estates of dukes who pride themselves on their holdings, even unutilized, and of the church—which, by the way, pays no taxes on its property, as it is part of the state—would justify calling in alienists. So involved, so serious has the problem become that any sincere attack upon it is bound to strike at the interests which still dominate in Spain.

And so it is that the Spain of 1930 enjoys agrarian problems which remain just about as they were pictured in a report on seignorial rights in the northwest of Spain, dated 1763, and others on conditions in the rest of the country by the Economic society of Madrid in 1780. Only a few years before the peasantry north of the Pyrenees took things into their own none too gentle hands.

The agrarian maladjustments affecting directly or indirectly 75 per cent of the population are at the base of most evils in Spanish life. Of illiteracy. Of grave unrest. Of agricultural underproduction. Of emigration. Of the virtual waste of the whole submerged mass, its fresh energy denied the impoverished middle class. In France you find that an enormous percentage of professional men and politicians are of definite peasant origin.

No Revolutions.

Spain has had no real revolution since the communeros, the little people of the municipalities, rose against the nobles and Charles V. in the middle of the sixteenth century, only to be put down bloodily. Since then she has had plenty of revolts, one against foreign domination, others engineered by political factions, but no revolutions. The ideals of the French revolution have echoed in all the world except Spain. But perhaps too late for that now. The inspiration these days is more Russian than French.

Not for centuries has Spain risen to an ideal. The Spaniard, fused by idealistic passion, is a different man. For the splendid dream of the church state, world unity in faith, he fought, ill clad, ill fed, all over the world. For "rapine and gold," said Angel Ganivet, the philosopher of Granada, who killed himself for love, he raged through the Americas. Unarmed, he flew at the troops of Napoleon, the foreign tyrant. But accepted his own and worse. Even for shoddy little slogans of politicos, during the last century he was willing to get himself killed on barricades.

The Spaniard is at heart more a nihilist than the Russian, perhaps, but when he gets the faith he is a terror. Schum, for instance.

Schum was a bootblack at the Maison Dorée in Barcelona. Too weary to shine shoes, he used to break windows now and then to assure himself rest and food in jail. There he met Pestana, the syndicalist leader. He got the faith. And how! Next time out he fell to and educated himself, learning chemistry, among other things, so that he could manufacture his own bombs. Now he is in jail for life, but his passion expresses itself in art. His drawings have won nation-wide attention and may get him a pardon.

A Heady Mixture.

The ideal hovering over the plains of Castile is a heady mixture. In Madrid they will deny the importance of socialism among the peasants. You have only to go and see. Here in Don Fadrique. In Alcazar de San Juan, the rich wine center where there are 200 proprietors, 130 tenants, and 13,000 laborers. A comparison between the peasants here and in El Toboso is proof enough that when the Marxian ideal takes hold of a Castilian it transforms him.

Somebody has said that the Spaniard, in his craving for authority imposed from 'way above, would invent a Catholic church if he hadn't it already. Or socialism. For party discipline is strong. The leaders, like Besteiro and Caballero, are austere, ascetic men, rigorous, directly in the tradition of the Castilian churchmen. Carpintero and his friends here pride themselves on their obedience to party discipline and remark that the Socialists in Quintanar are in need of "orientation."

With the authoritarian in every Spaniard goes the anarchist. In the south rather more the latter. Syndicalism, nonpolitical, violent, has always seethed on the plains of Andalusia, where the laborer "has never seen the right side of an institution."

The most significant phenomenon in Spain in years, perhaps, is that socialism from Madrid is cutting in on syndicalism in Andalusia. The explanation seems to be simply that the peasant has watched the growing power of the Socialist party, seen that even Primo didn't dare step on it, and is beginning to realize the advantages of being represented at court. He sees for the first time that the old order is not so solid that you need to bomb it.

But what will happen to the old institutions of Spain, caciquismo, for instance, and the phantom Liberal and Conservative parties trying painfully now to rise from the dust, if the hitherto passive peasant goes and develops political consciousness, picking his own leaders from his own ranks? Class consciousness, too, before he has ever had civic consciousness.

Republic Urged.

Marcelino Domingo, the radical leader, not a Socialist, pleaded with the Conservative Republicans the other day in the Ateneo to stir themselves for the revolution, to speed the establishment of a republic, which alone, he said, could meet these problems. The left wing would follow the leadership of the right, he promised. "If you wait too long the peasant in the south and in Castile will call for quite another kind of revolution."

Santiago Alba, envisaging with the king just now "a democratization of the monarchy" before it is too late, warns that a republican revolution, any kind of an overturn, would be sure to precipitate a social struggle and "a pseudo-communistic experiment, followed by another dictatorship." The Socialists say nothing.

Loose analogies present themselves between the Spain of 1930 and the Russia of 1910. There are keen brains among the Socialists, some of them closer to communism than they think it politic to admit. But in moments of enthusiasm like this it is too much to expect them to follow down the Russian analogies and consider what might happen if the fundamentally conservative peasant's thirst for land were slaked. Might not the Villa de Don Fadriques become El Tobosos?

In the meantime, iron Socialist discipline pending developments.

But the simpler comrades here dream of extracting the heads of guardia civiles from under those hated black fantail hats. And it is notorious that when revolutions do come new leaders rise to supplant the old.

Calls Italy Temperate.

ROME.—(AP)—Minister of Agriculture Acerbo, discussing the 1930 wine crop, told the senate that Italy was a temperate country. Deaths from alcoholism amounted to only 19 for every 100,000 inhabitants, whereas in Germany the figure was 510, in England 1,070, and in Belgium 2,850.

Catchy Music in Vital Opera, 'Bartered Bride'

Folk Tunes Enliven This Work of Smetana's.

By Edward Moore.

good Mme. Rethberg is in that department of art; some of us who go to concerts, as well, know she is a great singer of songs, with a voice that has quality, power, range, flexibility of the best, and that voice controlled by the soul of a musician. She settled that point when she was one of Mr. Stock's soloists with the Chicago Symphony orchestra a few seasons ago.

So, on Thursday night she will sing the big aria, "Leise, Leise," from Weber's "Der Freischutz," four songs by Joseph Marx, a composer of great ability who is just beginning to win a belated recognition in this country, and the "Liebestod" from Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde." Meanwhile the Chicago Symphony orchestra will play Wagner's "Tannhäuser" overture, George Schumann's "Dance of the Nymphs and Satyrs," Mr. Stock's Concert Waltz, and the prelude to "Tristan und Isolde."

Wilfrid Pelletier will conduct for Mme. Rethberg, and Eric DeLamarter the orchestral numbers. The conductorial total of the evening will be three, for Louis Hasselmans will pick up the baton for the act of "Les Huguenots."

A Tale of the Huguenots.

In this excerpt, another first performance for Ravinia by the way, Mme. Gall will be the Valentine, Mr. Martinelli the Raoul de Nangis, Mr. Danise the Comte de Nevers, and Mr. Rothier the Comte de St. Bris.

In the three acts which precede this one, Raoul, a Huguenot leader, has fallen in love with Valentine, daughter of the royalist nobleman, Comte de St. Bris. It is the desire of the queen that they shall marry, thus bringing peace between the opposing factions of France. However, through a misunderstanding, Raoul draws the conclusion that Valentine has been the mistress of De Nevers, and therefore refuses her hand.

Raoul is entirely wrong, but Valentine is later married to de Nevers, though not until after she has saved Raoul's life when he was about to be killed by those who were incensed because of his actions towards Valentine. From the queen Raoul finally learns the truth.

The scene of act IV is laid in Valentine's apartment, where Raoul comes to see Valentine that she may confirm what the queen has told him. During their interview the royalist enemies of Raoul arrive and Valentine conceals Raoul in an adjoining room. The massacre of St. Bartholomew is planned, but De Nevers, husband of Valentine, refuses to join in the plot. He gives up his sword into the hands of Valentine's father and is made a prisoner.

Then follows the blessing of the swords, one of the great moments of opera. Raoul comes from his hiding place, his intention being to notify his own faction of their peril. Valentine tries to detain him, knowing he is rushing to death. In the extremity of the moment she declares her love for him, but already the massacre has begun and Raoul tries to go to the aid of his friends. Valentine blocks his passage, but Raoul leaps from a window into the street, where death awaits him.

Other High Spots of the Week.

There will be other high spots in the week. Two musical versions of that young person of old France who had shaky morals but was good company, Manon Lescaut, will be given: Puccini's tomorrow night with Bori and Martinelli, Massenet's on Friday night with Gall and Chamlee. Then a lovely performance of a lovely work, "L'Amore dei Tre Re" Saturday night, the bewitching "Marouf" Tuesday night, and another enticing work, "The Bartered Bride," Wednesday night.

This afternoon's concert takes the title of the "Fifth Annual Polish Arts Club Afternoon." The program of Polish music will be played by the Chicago Symphony orchestra, Eric DeLamarter conducting. Mme. Ina Bourskaya, mezzo soprano of the Ravinia opera forces, and Michel Wilkomirski, violinist, will be the soloists. The orchestra program will include Chopin's Military Polonaise; Paderewski's "Dances" from "Manru." The Polonaise and "After Vespers" from Moniuszko's opera "Halka," will be sung by four Polish choruses combined under the direction of G. Chrzanowski.

Mme. Bourskaya's solo group will include "Zaczarwano Krolewna," by Niewiadomski; "Rozyezka," by Moniuszko, and "Slowiczku Moj," by Niewiadomski. Mr. Wilkmirski will play "Legende" and "Polonaise," by Wieniawski. Dr. Alexander Szczepanski, consul general of Poland in Chicago, will be the guest of honor on this occasion. Like all the national concerts at Ravinia, this concert will be open to the general public.

And that Mme. Bourskaya may be able to put in a full day, she will appear in the name part of "Carmen" in the evening. Here she will be associated with Queena Mario, Edward Johnson, Mario Basiola, and the rest of the first rate cast that sang the work before.

A Cosmopolitan Program.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Chicago festival of chamber music next October will, as far as composers are concerned, be about as cosmopolitan a list of music as one is likely to find. Fifteen compositions to be performed in the festival represent eight different nations. All the works have been dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge.

American composers contribute this: Charles Martin Loeffler of Boston, a new partita for violin and piano; Frederick Stock of Chicago, a new concertante for solo string quartet and orchestra of wind instruments; Gustav Strube of Baltimore, a sonata for cello and piano composed in 1926 but played for the first time in the festival.

England has two composers, Frank Bridge with a new piano trio, and Arnold Bax with a new "Legend" for piano and viola. Germany has only one representative, Paul Hindemith, who has written a new piano concerto.

A whole program will be devoted to Italian composers. Francesco Malipiero's "Ritrovari" for chamber orchestra will have its first performance in America. Mario Pilati sends a sonata for flute and piano which won a prize offered by Mrs. Coolidge in the name of the Scarlatti association of Naples, and which will likewise have its first American performance here. Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco has written a new string quartet.

France is represented by Albert Roussel's trio for flute, viola, and cello, written in 1929, and Charles Salzedo's "Préambule et Jeux" for harp, string quintet, and winds. Jaroslav Kricka of Czecho-Slovakia, professor at the Prague conservatory, sends in a sonatina for violin and viola; Conrad Beck represents Switzerland with a new concerto for string quartet and orchestra, and Théodore Szántó, Hungarian, provides a "Choreographic Suite" for string quartet written in 1929.

Among new engagements for the coming season of the German Grand Opera company are Max von Schillings as principal conductor and Marie von Essen Kent of Detroit as leading contralto. Mr. Von Schillings rates as guest-conductor at the Berlin Staatsoper. Mme. Von Essen was engaged from the Dresden opera, having been earlier known in America as Mary Kent with both the Scotti and San Carlo opera companies.

Moissaye Boguslawski, the pianist, is this afternoon playing a Chopin program in Clarence Adler's midsummer concert series at Lake Placid, New York. The music colony there inhabits a camp known in the early American tongue of that district as Ka-ren-ni-o-ke. In case you are not up on the dialect, Mr. Boguslawski relays the information that it means "Place of beautiful song."

Albert Rappaport of Chicago is to sing the tenor solo part in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in San Francisco Sept. 2. Alfred Hertz will conduct the performance.

Two women who have figured prominently in American music will be featured together this season. Mrs. Eleanor Everest Freer has written, and May Valentine will conduct, the opera, "Frithiof," which will be presented at the Studebaker theater in February. The book is founded on a Norse legend by Tegner, and the opera will be the second of three recital performances of opera in English given by the Chicago Civic Choral club.

All-Male Cast.

"The Last Mile," the drama of prison life and that which will open the new Harris theater on Labor day, has no women in the cast. The original all-male company, which is coming here, includes: Spencer Tracy, James Bell, Ralph Theadore, Howard Phillips, Frederick Forrester, Henry O'Neill, Ernest Whitman, George Leach, Herbert Heywood, Don Costello, Richard Abbott, Clarence Chase, Orville Harris, and Albert West.

This play, written by John Wexley, was an active candidate for the Pulitzer prize of last season, finally awarded to "The Green Pastures." It was founded upon a sketch written by a condemned man in a western prison shortly before his execution and published in the American Mercury.

OPERA AND CONCERT

ELISABETH RETHBERG

[De Gueldre Photo.]

THE line above the picture describes Mme. Rethberg's musical activities completely if briefly, though it does not indicate how good she is in both. At any rate, she will demonstrate both at Ravinia this week, with a striking concert program sung with the Chicago Symphony orchestra on Thursday night, and in that work of sheer delight, "The Bartered Bride," the night before. Incidentally, the picture shows how she looks in the opera.

VOICE OF THE FAN

For Mary Brian.

Miss Mae Tinée. "Charming" is right.

While Miss Brian does not pose as a beauty in her pictures, she is one of the most lovable of all the present army of movie stars. Of course she has the advantage of getting parts that show her as the kind of character the public likes. She gets them because she can play them well. We get the impression that in private life Mary Brian has been the kind of character she depicts in so many of her pictures, the good and wholesome girl.

When the public can like so well a girl like Mary Brian and the parts she plays, what a lie it gives to the average movie producer who defends his filthy sexy product as "what the public wants." The public does not want it, but it has to take a lot of it because the producers like it and it is about the only kind of product the average producer and his nit wit sex minded personnel know how to turn out.

You may tell Miss Brian that she has one debt to pay, and that is for the mushy mouthed "Negro talk" used in playing the part of the southern girl in "Only the Brave." The charming manners, speech and culture of the Old Virginia aristocratic class she attempted to portray here are unexcelled in America. Some one instructed Miss Brian wrong in Virginia speech. Tell her that if she ever takes the part of a southern girl again, to make amends for this by using her most beautiful speech, manners and language. A FRIEND.

Editor's note: I guess this will make Mary glad!

Chester Morris for the Albums.

Dear Miss Tinée: Your column is ace high as far as I'm concerned. I enjoy your breezy reviews, and as a rule I agree with them, but I have just one complaint to make. Why don't you give us a picture of Chester Morris for our albums? He's the "outstandinist" motion picture actor, in my estimation, but I seldom see a picture of him. Come on, Mae; try to publish one for us some Sunday, will yuh? If you do, you'll have my undying gratitude.

Sincerely, JEAN FOSTER.

Editor's note—Guess we'll have to do that little thing! Thanks.

Ann Harding's Film Party Is Gay Success

All Hollywood Turns Out for 'Holiday' Premier.

By Rosalind Shaffer.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Aug. 16.—[Special.] — Hollywood turned out as for a festival for the opening at Carthay Circle theater of Ann Harding's success, "Holiday." Everybody of importance from Gloria Swanson to Joan Crawford was there.

Guests entering the theater each were presented with white gardenias carried in baskets by the Spanish usherettes, each gardenia bearing a card saying: "Souvenir of Ann Harding's birthday, Carthay Circle theater."

Everybody was so excited and anxious to see everybody else that practically nobody was seated at the time scheduled for raising the curtain. Crowds stood about at the heads of aisles, in the lobbies and in the porch of the theater, talking, looking and crowding.

The curtain finally went up after interminable waiting. Gloria Swanson was seated with a handsome young man—not the marquis. Applause followed, which was confusing, as Joan Crawford and young Doug Fairbanks entered at the moment and did not know what it was all about.

Marguerite Churchill, back from location on "The Big Trail," was with her admirer, Russell Gleason, after giving the gossips a bit of worry by being chummy with John Wayne while on the location trip. John is a member of the cast in "The Big Trail."

Margaret Livingston in white ermine looked snappy and lively, her haircut brushed off the forehead much to the admiration of her tall, good looking escort. Maureen O'Sullivan, quite the young sophisticate in black sequins which supplied a startling contrast to the simple Irish eyes seen in "Song o' My Heart," was having a lot of laughs with John Farrow, writer and man about town, hero of many escapades and not such a hero in his latest, when Vivian Duncan was attacked by Rex Lease at Farrow's beach home and the host proved unable to hear her screams, though Vivian hollered herself into a congestion of the vocal cords.

Cody Introduces 'em

Incidentally Farrow was for a time the favored escort of Dolores Del Rio, just married, who in her naïve Spanish way picked the fiesta at Santa Barbara in which to stage a quiet wedding. Only 10,000 people attended.

Getting back to the opening. After the picture, Lew Cody, granddaddy to all masters of ceremonies and toastmaster par excellence, introduced Harry Bannister, husband of Ann Harding, who introduced each member of the cast in turn. When the last introduction, that of Miss Harding, Bannister's lovely wife, was made, Bannister turned to face her as she came out of the wings. Ann wore a white satin gown with an overdress of fragile black lace ornamented with a blue ribbon caught with roses at the shoulder.

She did not look towards the audience, but went right to her husband, her arms outstretched. It was very simple, natural and unaffected, and as she kissed him it seemed the most natural thing in the world. It said plainly that she felt his applause to be the first she wished to cherish on her gala night.

The Bannisters are considered to be very happy normal people with their little daughter, Jane Bannister, two years old, and their lovely Hilltop home with its surrounding acres which the screen pair are making into one of Hollywood's loveliest estates. Bannister is under contract to Pathé, as is his wife.

Remember Natalie?

Natalie Kingston, who stepped off the screen a few years ago when she married George Andersh, young banker, is returning to films again. She gets a good start as one of the two feminine leads opposite Buddy Rogers in "Molinoff."

"TOM SAWYER," Paramount's talking version of the Mark Twain classic, which will bring little Jackie Coogan (not so little any more!) back to the screen, has gone into production at the west coast studio. In the cast will be that small genius Mitizi Green and Junior Durkin.

BLANCHE SWEET has been signed by Radio pictures to play the rôle of "Queenie" in the screenization of Rex Beach's novel "The Silver Horde."

RICARDO CORTEZ will be seen playing a featured rôle in Warner Brother's "Illicit." Ben Lyon has signed a five year contract with Warner Brothers.

a possibility here. The Illinois, where the Ziegfeld entertainments usually lodge, as yet has nothing to declare. Ed Wynn in "Simple Simon," "Sweet Adeline," and Fred Stone's latest pastime, "Ripples," are prospects for the Illinois as the play-going season develops.

The Princess will open its Dramatic league subscription season Oct 6 [the same night that the Guild starts] with a comedy adapted from the Hungarian originally named "The King's Forty-Horse-Power Motor," and now announced as "The Girl in the News."

The much discussed Goodman repertory company will begin to show what it can do under a new director, Hubert Osborne, Tuesday night, Oct. 14. "The Firebrand," a romantic comedy with Benvenuto Cellini as its hero, is announced as the first play.

The Erlanger stands mute, thus far. The Civic theater will shelter Fritz Leiber's Shakespeareans again, opening about the time the opera season begins. Secret agents have discovered that Mr. Leiber's publicity department, three in number, has arrived in Chicago. Mr. Leiber's plans regarding additions to the repertory and changes in the company still rest, however, in the bosom of the Sphinx.

Famous Fifty.

David Belasco recently celebrated a birthday which brought him to the ripe old age of 77 by promising five new plays for the coming year and by naming the best fifty actors of all time. One of his new plays, "Dancing Partner," is now doing well on Broadway, and six members of his roll of honor are sending him flowers and hysterical telegrams of appreciation. The others also would have responded but for the fact they have long since passed behind the curtain that separates this world from the actors' Valhalla.

The half dozen living players in Mr. Belasco's Hall of Fame are George M. Cohan, still up and doing at the age of 52; Mary Anderson, 71 years old and living in retirement in England; Minnie Madden Fiske, who keeps right on acting at 65; Maude Adams, now 58, who is about to emerge from a retirement of years; Julia Marlowe, emeritus queen of the Shakespeareans, aged 64, and David Warfield, also 64, inactive for several years and seriously ill.

Mr. Belasco names thirty-two men and eighteen women, among them three Booths, two Drews and two Keans. David Garrick is his oldest and Mr. Cohan his youngest. Here they all are, in no special order, to be clipped for your scrap book or to be quarreled with, as you choose:

RIVERVIEW PARK'S eighteenth annual Mardi Gras carnival, invented by A. R. Hodge as usual, is colorful and gay. Paris Thrills Members of Burns Mantle Drama Party

"Cynara," with a proper cast, should play well in our land, for all it is builded conventionally around the familiar theme of should the wife forgive a husband who had to shatter a commandment in order to preserve his self-respect as a gentleman.

Phil Barry treated the same theme more convincingly in "Paris Bound," but this is a good second. The wife forgives and the husband insists that, really, unfaithfulness, under certain circumstances, is nothing to break up a home over.

Paris, Here We Come!

Seventeenth day. Paris, here we come!

I think all the most satisfactory English tours must begin with England, especially in the spring or early summer. To go from the chill rains and mist into the sunlight and smiling fields across the channel is to experience one of the real thrills of the adventure. The white cliffs of Dover welcome us. I don't know why they always put a lump in my throat, but they do.

The channel was friendly, and we had lunch aboard. There were poppies in the fields and smiles on the wayside faces. We were in Paris by dinner time and had made obeisance from the balconies of the Hotel de Paris. The sun was disappearing, the Eiffel tower loomed high. The heights of Montmartre were shining and alluring. The crowds walking the boulevard below, splashed with red and yellow, black and blue, were gay. The cafés were jammed with serious but light drinkers. All was forgiven. Even the Lifseys, who did our booking in London as well as here. There is nothing in all the world just like the first thrill of Paris.

Day of Sightseeing.

Eighteenth day. A bit emotional.

We were up at 7, loving even the noises of the boulevard that had wakened us . . . Muffled, friendly noises . . . I felt like a blooming Musselman as I opened the steel shutters and stood, in a bathrobe, salaaming before the beauty of the city and the morning. . . . I knew that soon I'd know that the taximen were on the make; the waiters more so; the hotel boys and girls smilingly contemptuous of le touriste américain; that the nude shows had been vulgarized to meet our alleged taste . . . Still, this morning and this thrilling picture were worth it. . . . They are not so clean as the English, these Parisians, but they are a lot gayer. . . . Perhaps that is the reason.

We breakfasted in the room. . . . To accommodate the hotel, mark you . . . with French casement windows open and the smiling city beyond. . . . We had our coffee and rolls. . . . The bus came at 9, and thence through the usual routine with a hoarse, serious, limping little ex-hero as a guide. To the Bastille with the only angel in the city, guide said, atop the monument. To Saint Gervaise, but recently patched up after having been punctured by a big bertha shell one Good Friday during the war.

To the chapel of the kings in what is now the city prison where superstitious old Louis XI. worshiped through a grated window in the wall. . . . Not many prisoners, guide says . . . Crime, too, has its slack seasons . . . To Notre Dame to find, for the first time, dead bishops' hats suspended over the altar and rustling lightly in the drafts created by dozens of guides telling four, five, six, eight circles of tourists, mostly American, the familiar stories . . . And this, I swear, shall be my last cathedral.

To the tomb of Napoleon with the wonderful sun-ray glass. . . .

I gave them their choice of plays in the evening—"Marius" or "Maya," with a warning that "Maya" was forbiddingly bold and many times banned . . . So they chose "Maya." . . . A weak performance . . . Semi-amateur, by an English company in the English theater. . . . The leading woman, Rachel Berendt, having quarreled with some one, Sibyl Harris, translator, was playing the rôle. . . . Not so good.

Rushing the Shops.

Nineteenth day. Again the shops.

This was the group's first day at the shops, and they were rushing them by 9, departing in twos and threes. I to the American Express . . . grown into a huge establishment since last I saw it . . . with a mail department as big as a city postoffice . . . a banking department larger than that of the average bank . . . a touring department to send you by air, water, rail, bus, drive your own, or buy and sell autos.

To the French line to extract a promise from the genial René Sagot that I shall be sent home the last of August . . . to THE TRIBUNE to meet Henry Wales . . . to the Comédie for tickets for Rostand's "Les Romanesques" . . . to the Folies Bergères to get tickets for the latest nudities . . . my ladies must see the Folies, else what would they tell the folks at home? . . . and, naturally, a leader must go where he is led, n'est-ce pas?

Twentieth day. And Versailles.

It is an hour's drive to Versailles . . . once there you walk literally through acres of neglected beauty . . . not to blame La Belle France, it would take an army to keep the principal rooms of the grand palace, alone, as clean as the English keep their historical exhibits. Besides, all the paintings are cleaner than they have been in a generation. . . . They were all taken down, thousands of feet of them, and hidden away during the war. That shook the dust from most of them.

Before that the ceiling of the lovely chapel that the fourteenth Louis had built for himself and Marie Antoinette, finished in 1717 and dusted in 1720, had not been touched since . . . the ten commandments are illustrated in the gorgeous paintings of this chapel ceiling. . . . But it is unwise to advertise the fact. . . . We told one young lady that not only were the commandments illustrated, but their breaking as well, and she was lost from the party for hours.

Louis XIV. spent the first 50 years of his life posing for artists, mostly on horseback, which is particularly tiring . . . I do not wonder that he had to make frequent trips to the Petit Trianon to rest with his lady friends.

Du Barry Did Her Bit.

Du Barry certainly did her bit for France, considering the state of Louis' mind after those hours and hours in the studios. . . . And the life he led in the grand palace. . . . Guards at the peephole outside the lobby to report when he was getting up, relaying the message, guard by guard, all the way to Paris. . . . So that by the time he was shaved, dressed, and at his tennis the people of Paris knew that he had stirred and rolled over.

We had special permission, being a drama league, to see Marie Antoinette's private theater, in which she played parts on occasion and was counted quite an actress, considering . . . But we looked at the exterior and hurried on. . . . It was getting late and we had seen a lot. . . . One more Louis and I think I should have run raving down the avenue.

To stop at Malmaison, Josephine's hard luck palace, on our way in. . . . It is now the nation's Napoleonic museum, with the emperor's most intimate belongings under glass.

And so to Paris, with visions of that tremendous hall of battles, where the peace treaty was signed, and acres and acres of short beds in which Louis slept, rooms in which Louis danced, nooks in which Louis created the courtiers and eluded most of his ladies in waiting.

Visions of Napoleon walking the gardens of Malmaison arguing with Josephine. . . . Visions of a countryside reeking with history. . . . And visions of innumerable groups of American tourists, ears extended, playing their part in the tourist racket hundreds of years later. . . . I think the last murmur I heard must have been the laughter of the gods.

One more day in Paris and the cavalcade moves on to Avignon and the old Roman theaters at Orange and Nimes.

New York Stage Perks Up with Cool Weather

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—[Special.]—A few days of cooler weather brought the playgoers out in force, and the Rialto was filled with boasts of sold out houses as the week waxed on. On one night it was estimated that 2,500 persons had been turned away from Mr. Leblang's cut rate counters, and the managers of several fair-to-middling shows were fully convinced that they were proprietors of smash hits. It is somewhat sad to reflect that it is not always August, nor is it always cool. Nor, for that matter, are there always so few entertainments in the town.

Irving Berlin is back in this town from Hollywood, but not for purposes of theatrical production. In another ten days he will turn around and go back, being mightily busy with a talking picture.

They say that Jed Harris has once more been drawn into some sort of advisory association with Mr. Rose's forthcoming revue, "Corned Beef and Roses." At the very least, it seems, he will stage the sketches. . . . There was a mid-week rumor that George Jessel would be found cavorting in this entertainment along with Fanny Brice. Just before that Mr. Jessel was busy with a musical show from Germany—a novel affair in which actors and audience mingle to so complete an extent that they never do tell each other apart. Mr. Jessel is a volatile fellow, and you never can tell just what he'll turn to.

Now here is strange news from a Los Angeles paper. It says, in effect, that Louis Bromfield, the novelist, has been engaged by Florenz Ziegfeld to write a revue—not a musical comedy, but a revue—in which Marilyn Miller and the Astaires will appear. There will be, however, "a thread of story." . . . It may be true, of course, but the chances are against it. Mr. Bromfield does not sound like the sort of fellow who would write anything so frivolous as a revue, in the first place, and William Anthony Maguire has been writing the Miller-Astaire show for several months, in the second. At all events Mr. Ziegfeld is due home from Canada any minute now, and maybe he will be willing to tell.

Anne Nichols, author of "Abie's Irish Rose," who shut up shop and went to the coast some months ago, is back in New York. But it seems to be definite that she is through with the theater.

Ray Goetz is trying hard to get his musical show called "The New Yorkers" ready for October production. It is apparently designed as a companion piece to "Fifty Million Frenchmen," and will have Fred Waring's orchestra and Frances Williams in its lineup, with a further probability of the James Durante trio. Mr. Waring's contract, they say, calls for an opening not later than two weeks after Oct. 6.

George Manker Waters, who wrote most of "Burlesque," has made ready a new play named "American Tempo," and plans to open it here next month with Vivienne Osborne in its chief role. It is something rather big, calling for an orchestra of 16, as well as a good deal of scenery. Mr. Waters is producing it himself.

They are uncertain fellows, these producers. Brock Pemberton has been announcing three plays as his season's fare, and it might have been assumed that his first production of the year would be drawn from this trio. But now it seems that he is on the track of a fourth play, and naturally that is the one that he plans to try out first.

Further peripatetic items are to the effect that Helen Hayes got back from the Pacific coast during the week, and that Ruth Gordon, who was visiting her, is also back. And Lorenz Hart, who landed from the coast on Monday, lingered but two days, sailing on Wednesday for London to look after the musical show called "Ever Green," for which he and Mr. Rodgers are furnishing lyrics and tunes.

The Shuberts have informed the Actors' Equity association, which likes to know about such things, that they are bringing over ten English companies to act in as many English plays this season. They feel, it is said, that the recent collapse of "On the Q. T." in the provinces was due to the fact that it was an English play not acted by an English company, although returned travelers who saw the play in London report that it was pretty bad even there.

The tale runs that Earl Carroll has offered Al Jolson the sum of $12,000 weekly to appear in a revue—presumably the one to be called "Personalities." Considering that Carroll proposes to put six or eight stars into that entertainment, and that the others will merely cost him an additional $12,000, if not more, one is tempted to do a little figuring. . . . Presumably Mr. Jolson has not yet given an answer. He is known to look upon regular stage work with reluctance, but the amount is one that might easily tempt him.

Theater Guild

THERESA HELBURN, executive director of the Theater Guild, who returned from Europe last Tuesday night, brought back two plays by French authors for guild production. She reported, however, that only in Germany is the theater as alive as it is in America. In Berlin, she said, "The new generation is making its own tradition."

Miss Helburn also arranged for the London production of "Strange Interlude," which, she declared, had been passed by the lord chamberlain without a single change. The play will be produced over there in November, and will be played by an English cast.

The two French plays brought back by Miss Helburn are "Lui," by Alfred Avoir, and "The Coward," by H. R. Lenormand. Miss Helburn reported that Eugene O'Neill is working on a play that he hopes to have ready for production some time during the season after this.

The Theater Guild will start its New York season on Oct. 13 with the production of Maxwell Anderson's "Elizabeth the Queen," which will have Lynn Fontanne, Alfred Lunt and Albert Carroll in its chief rôles.

COMING TO SELWYN

CECILIA LOFTUS

THE name and fame of Cissie Loftus are not forgotten, although nearly twenty years have passed since she had her heyday as the world's greatest mimic. She is now an actress of charm and distinction in "grande dame" roles. We saw her last fall in "Thunder in the Aair," at the Princess; and we will see her again soon in "Lost Sheep," which opens the new season at the Selwyn theater Saturday evening, August 30.

THE ARMCHAIR PLAYGOER

By Fanny Butcher.

IN NEW YORK—

The one new play in New York is not, unfortunately, one which armchair playgoers can attend vicariously, but it is interesting to us because it is the work of a writer who, a decade or more ago, was looked upon as one of the white hopes of the English novel. "Suspense"—the play—is, like "Journey's End," about the war, and has an all male cast, and it will, before long, be published in book form, if New York audiences accept it with the same gusto as London audiences have.

PATRICK MacGILL.

It was written by Patrick MacGill. The story of Patrick MacGill is in itself a thriller. He was born in 1890 and went three years to a mountain school. No other education has he had. He worked between the ages of 12 and 19 at all sorts of manual labor. The first things he wrote were poems, then a volume of short stories called "Children of the Dead End," and his literary future was made.

When "The Rat Pit" followed it, critics were not only unrestrained in their praises of the new and brilliant navvy novelist, but they declared that a whole new field of English chronicles stretched before readers in the unequaled frankness and honesty of MacGill's transcriptions of lowly life. Then came the war, and many books about the war.

"Suspense" is a combination of those two phases of Mr. MacGill's literary life. The characters are not, like the characters in "Journey's End," officers, but the men in the ranks, men such as the author wrote of in his early days of fiction. And the subject is the great upheaval which influenced his career for many years.

AT RAVINIA—

"Carmen," which is being sung tonight at Ravinia, leads armchair playgoers to the middle of the nineteenth century when Prosper Merimee published a novelette called "Carmen" which caused an enormous sensation. Up to that time, literary historians chronicle, French fiction had been concerned with artificial emotions and artificial characters. Merimee turned from them to primitive ferocities and primitive passions.

"Manon Lescaut," by Puccini, which is being sung on Monday night, reminds us that "Manon Lescaut," from which the story was taken, is one of the masterpieces of French literature. L'Abbe Prevost wrote it (in 1733) under the title, "Historie de Chevalier des Grieux et de Manon Lescaut," but the shorter title has become its official one in all of the various editions in which it is available today.

On Friday evening another version of the story of Manon Lescaut will be sung, the Massenet opera which is called merely "Manon."

On Tuesday evening "Marouf" should lead armchair playgoers to those thousand and one nights of incomparable story telling, for "Marouf" "The Cobbler of Cairo" is one of the most amusing tales of the "Arabian Nights."

B'way Openings

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—[Special.]—The new plays which will have their premières on the Manhattan stage this week are as follows:

"Through the Night"—Tomorrow night at the Theatre Masque. Helen MacKellar is chief player in this piece, which is the work of Samuel Ruskin Golding and Paul Dickey, a pair of veteran playwrights who have not previously joined hands. The players will also include John Westley, Noel Tearle and George MacQuarrie.

"Hot Rhythm"—Tuesday night at the Times Square theater. That wandering showman, Will Morrissey, is behind this venture. It is a Negro revue, and it is said to be related to the revue that Mr. Morrissey put on down in Greenwich Village in the spring, although that wasn't a Negro revue at all. Doubtless this can be figured out.

Reopening:

"Topaze"—Tomorrow night at the Ethel Barrymore theater. M. Pangnol's comedy again, with Catherine Willard as the woman this time, and Frank Morgan again as the school teacher.

"Lost Sheep"—Tomorrow night at the Selwyn theater. The return of one of the spring entrants.

"Young Sinners"—Tomorrow night at the Shubert theater. One of last season's sturdy stayers, back for a brief visit before taking to the road.

Shakespeare.

"Twelfth Night," the first of the two plays in which Kenneth Macgowan and Joseph Verner Reed will present Jane Cowl in repertory this fall, has gone into rehearsal under the direction of Andrew Leigh, former director of the famous "Old Vic" theater in London. Miss Cowl's company will include Leon Quartermaine, who formerly was in "Journey's End"; Arthur Hohl, Walter Kingsford, Jessie Ralph, Joyce Carey, Robert Lowe, Gordon Burby, Elisha Cook Jr., Lewis Martin, and Coburn Goodwin. "Twelfth Night" will open in Boston on Sept. 8.

Mr. Talkie's Latest Wallop Staggers Ol' Sister Drama

By Tom Pettey.

lores Costello and Conrad Nagle in the first important appearance of the talking picture. But now, my goodness, it is an occasion. You wear your tuxedo or if it is at the "cleaners" your best blue serge. During the intermission [Oh, yes, there is an intermission!] one discusses the voice modulation, color tones [if it is one of those red, white, and blue opuses], adaptation, dialogue, and the whereabouts of the nearest speakeasy. The best people are gathered all about you and it is no trouble at all to pick out the artichoke king, the building czar, and their festive little parties made up of returned visitors to Sing Sing.

Opening night used to swell out to the sidewalk. Now it bulges into the street and diverts traffic in more than one way. Extra electric lights are in evidence, of course, but they are only a minor matter. There are costumed attendants, wild and tame animals, airplanes, limousines, and urchins. There always are plenty of urchins and old beggar ladies that will bless you for a quarter and curse you for a dime.

Full Speed Ahead.

More about picture activity on the east coast. There is no Hollywood shutdown here. "Laughter" is nearing completion at Paramount's New York studio, "The Best People" is just starting, and "Manhattan Mary" has begun rehearsals. Over in the new wing of the talkie factory where short subjects are born at the rate of three a week they are planning to speed it up to four.

Warner's Brooklyn studio is devoting all its time to the shorts and has reached the point where seven can be turned out in a week. That is, as the calendar goes, one a day. Warner's force is making some of its pictures on location. Recently short subjects were made at Brooklyn navy yard and on Riverside drive.

Returning for a moment to Paramount's Long Island plant one finds Ed Wynn, Ginger Rogers, and Stanley Smith at the studio. Tammany Young, the crasher, is there as an actor. Claudette Colbert and her husband, Norman Foster, who have been featured in Long Island made films, will return from a round the world trip the middle of October. Miss Colbert has been sending back a movie record of her voyage.

"The Royal Family," stage success of several seasons ago, will be made at the Long Island studio this fall. Ina Claire has completed her Los Angeles run of "Rebound" and will return to New York to play the lead in "The Royal Family." Frederic March, who has been playing with Nancy Carroll in "Laughter," will stay on for the making of "The Royal Family."

Political Films.

Chromotone studios have been busy making a political film. The first subject was made a week ago at Jones beach, the new state park on Long Island. Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who is up for a second term this fall, played the lead. Two other pictures were made at state parks and before the picture making is completed there will be about twenty reels for use in the coming campaign.

Aviation had the call at the Newsreel theater for a week. Capt. Hawks was shown making his record breaking coast to coast flight. There were stunt pictures, and some good dirigible shots.

Just Coasting.

Things that make this town look and sound different include: The orange and red sign advertising "Hell's Angels" at the Criterion theater . . . The loud speakers the talkie houses are using to plug their alleged song hits, and the radio programs coming from moving and parked automobiles . . . The silent turnstiles that are replacing the old rattlers . . . The barker in front of the Paramount. . . . The barker in front of the Rialto. . . . The barker in front of — every theater. . . . The low moan arising from the executive office of every hotel in town. . . . There ain't no business. . . . The pony golf course behind Roxey's where the chorus girls work after hours. . . . The face-lifting operation several Child's restaurants are undergoing. . . . The test-your-voice-for-the-talkies machine at the Rivoli, where it doesn't take long to find out whether you are a tenor or a basso. . . . The way of a maid with a man when they are both trying to enter the same subway door at the same time. . . . The way of a man with a maid on the same occasion. . . . The way of a maid with a man on any occasion. . . . The new automobile horns that boop-a-doop. The phonograph records they sell for 15 cents at every newsstand. . . . The lobby piano players and ballad singers. . . . The returned vacationer telling another returned vacationer about his sunburn. . . . The new autumn clothes. . . . The Chinatown and Coney Island bus spielers. . . . Everything is with sound these days.

Herbert Johnson Ends His European Tour

THIS is the tenth of the Herbert M. Johnson series of weekly letters from Europe giving a newsy résumé of musical and general conditions in the old world cities visited by him in his annual quest for talent for the Chicago Civic Opera.

LONDON.—Our 1930 European tour is over and we sail for the United States more than satisfied with the results of the summer's work. We have booked passage on the Europa and probably will be in Chicago when this letter reaches its readers.

London looks good to us after so many weeks on the continent. The weather is cool and pleasant and we know only by hearsay and what we see in the newspapers that there is a heat wave in another part of the world.

Just before leaving Paris we heard Mary McCormic, who returns to the Chicago Civic Opera company this season, in a splendid performance of Massenet's "Manon." Miss McCormic is the idol of Paris opera-goers and this, third from the last of her performances there this season, brought out a large and enthusiastic audience.

Miss McCormic certainly "put over" the title rôle. She was well costumed and her dramatic work was excellent. I have never heard her in such good voice, nor have I ever heard the aria in the second act or the gavotte in the third act sung so well. I am sure the Chicago public will like our presentation.

Miss McCormic will sing two performances of "Madame Butterfly" on the 11th and 18th of August and then will leave Paris for a vacation before sailing for the United States. She will arrive in Chicago in October.

Charles Hackett, who was with us on our motor trip from Biarritz to Paris, remained there to begin work on "Manon" with Miss McCormic and Maestro Emil Cooper. He also has resumed rehearsals of "Camille" with Mr. Cooper. All in all, Paris has been a center for the Civic Opera this summer, with Mary Garden, Chase Baromeo, Oscar Colcaire, and other artists working there at various times since the end of April.

Wagner's Death.

From Bayreuth we learn that Toscanini scored his usual great success at the festival. Rudolph Bockelmann, one of our new German baritones, and Alexander Kipnis repeated their previous successes in the Wagneria répertoire. They are both splendid artists and much in demand in Europe.

As I write this letter telegraphic reports from Bayreuth tell of a sad event in the death of Siegfried Wagner, and the statement with this news is that the festival is to continue without interruption, in accordance with a last wish expressed by the son of the great composer.

The death of Siegfried Wagner removes from the field of opera one of its most interesting figures—a man who had brroad vision as a producer and the originality and strength to carry a famous name with dignity and success, a task not easy for any man.

By the time you read this letter, the Munich festival will have begun, with Marie Olszewska, Mr. Kipnis, and Eduard Habich having important assignments. This annual festival in the Bavarian capital is becoming one of the most important in Europe and the quality of the performances is very high.

From Venice we learn that the two Civic opera scholarship winners, Lydia Mihm and Helen Ornstein, sang at a private recital at the Lido, and achieved a well deserved success. These two girls are rapidly making themselves ready for their operatic débuts and I believe they stand better than even chance of success. Certainly, if hard work will bring about success—and it is the only medium I know of—these girls will get somewhere in music.

Coming Programs.

The operatic répertoire for the coming season in Berlin will include revivals of foreign works and one or two interesting novelties. The German capital is to have performances of Gounod's "Faust," Mozart's "Cosi fan Tutte," Johann Strauss' "A Night in Venice," Puccini's "Manon Lescaut," and Borodin's "Prince Igor" for the first time in several years, and is to hear a new opera, "Fremde Erde" [Strange Land], by the young modernist, Karol Rathaus, a German version of Lattuada's "La Preciose Ridicole" and Krenek's "Orpheus," as novelties. Several ballets are included among the season's new offerings. One of them—Johann Strauss' "Cinderella"—a revival and two others—Reznicek's "Dance Symphony" and Bienstock's "Bezwinger bes Lebens" [A Master of life], novelties. Bersoni's "Dr. Faustus," Alban Berg's "Wozzek," Pfitzner's "Palestrina," and Giordano's "Il Re" are continued in the standard répertoire. Richard Strauss is to conduct several guest performances, and Fritz Wolf, tenor from Covent Garden and Bayreuth, who made his operatic début in Breslau, has been added to the roster of principal artists.

The program for the 1930-31 season at the Opera Comique in Paris includes the following novelties: "Eros Vainqueur," by De Breville; "Cantegril," by Roger Ducasse; "Le Diable Amoureux," by Roland Manuel; "The Grandmother," by Charles Silver, and several ballets. Revivals include "Quand la Cloche Sonnera," by Bachelet; "La Vie Breve," by Manuel de Falla; "La Rotisserie de la Reine Pedaque," by Levade; "Penelope," by Faure, and "Iphigenie en Tauride," by Christoph Willabald Gluck.

The Paris opera announces that great stress will be laid on the production of ballet during the coming season with "Le Jardin sur l'Oronte," by Bachelet, having an important place. Mlle. Suzanne Lorcia, a native of Paris and a member of the Paris Opera ballet since infancy, has been named as premiere danseuse etoile.

THE annual Lake Geneva flower, fruit and vegetable show held recently at Horticultural hall attracted hundreds of visitors from Chicago and the north shore. Mrs. W. Press Hodgkins came from Lake Forest to view the display. Mrs. Albert F. Madlener Jr., Mrs. Catharine Bartholomay Osborne and Mrs. Sangston Hettler officiated at the fruit and cake counters. Mrs. William Nelson Pelouze, in charge of the cut flower sale, was assisted by her daughter, Miss Medora Pelouze, Miss Patricia Silverthorne, and Miss Catherine Collins. Mrs. Charles W. Stiger was a visitor on the opening day.

Gotham's Agog Over Newest Engagement

Mary Atwell Will Marry Frank Hitchcock.

By Nancy Randolph.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Not since those far gone days when the Wilson family burst into society by way of the altar has there been such a coup d'état as that engendered by the Atwell youngsters, son and daughter of the George J. Atwells of New York.

There have been in the last decade many more than a handful of amazingly rich New Yorkers who have succeeded in definitely becoming members of society. Carping critics insist that there is no such thing as society any more—that the days of the Schuylers and Fishes, of the Astors and Rhinelanders are gone forever and that any one with a tail coat or a ball dress is an eligible member of the innermost circles.

That, however, is not so. The proof of the statement is the fact that it is still as hard to gain entry into Newport as ever it has been in the past, and there are quite a few notable hostesses in the Rhode Island stronghold who, ten years ago, were not known even on the fringes of society.

Nevertheless these cases of social success are those of adult members of New York's wealthy set. In the case of the Atwell family it is the children who have managed to bring the family into the limelight, and with a nonchalance and aplomb that has roused the admiration of society.

Elopement Recalled

It was only a week or two ago that the announcement was made that George J. Atwell Jr. and his charming young wife, the former Jean Cochran, were anxiously awaiting the arrival of an heir. Even now society has not forgotten the occasion when George decided that he adored the daughter of Princess Hohenlohe-Schillingsfurst by her marriage with Gifford Cochran and promptly eloped with pretty Jean. There wasn't anything for Madame la Princesse to do but give the young ones her blessing and regard them with beaming eyes as they proceeded to become the shining lights of the younger married set.

Of course, there were those who looked askance at George Sr., who is one of New York's self-made men, and, being a famous contractor, somewhat of a rough diamond. But now, to add to George's marriage with Jean Cochran, comes the announcement that Sister Mary is to become Mrs. Frank Hitchcock and, as daughter-in-law of Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock and sister of the one and only Tommy Jr., assume a place in society no one car contest.

Engagement on the Rocks.

The funniest part of it all is that many moons ago, shortly after Mary's début, she became engaged to young John Vanneck, who, besides being related to the English aristocracy, is very much the rich young man of high connection. John fell madly in love with pretty Mary, but couldn't quite forget the fact that his social standing was unduly high. He didn't, from what I was then made to understand, permit Mary to humbly accept the Cophetua graciousness, but constantly dwelt upon the Vanneck prestige, with the result that the engagement came to a sudden end.

Subsequently, Johnny Vanneck married the daughter of the millionaire Palley who recently gained such undesirable prominence through his connection with "Broadway" Ryder, the Wall street broker who startled the white way with his lavish expenditure of money and figured in the crash of his brokerage house. Now, Johnny's one time fiancée is marrying into what is certainly one of the most prominent families in New York society, and one of the best liked.

There is no doubt at all that the Atwells have arrived in society, and that they are settled to stay there.

This week has had a decided polo taste added to its cool and welcome weather. It seemed that the arrival of the seventy-odd polo ponies on the Minnetonka on Monday was the cue for the weather man to turn on perfect September weather, and the arrival of the English team on the Aquitania Thursday, was the signal for a veritable outburst of polo enthusiasm.

Long Island society is rather acute in its treatment of the polo matches. Of course the culmination, the crescendo, is the matches themselves, but the practice and elimination trials are minor social events as well.

For many weeks now there have been polo matches at Sands Point and at Meadowbrook, and every one has turned out in festive mood to watch the men who are striving for positions on the American team.

In the English party were Capt. Charles Tremayne, Lewis Lacey, C. T. I. Roark, Aiden Roark, Richard George, and Humphrey Guinness. Gerold Balding had arrived before his other teammates, choosing the Mauretania as his vehicle.

From now until the end of the month the English team will be ensconced near Meadowbrook and there will be daily matches in order that men and mounts may be in fighting trim by the time the internationals come around.

Society is making the most of the visiting players. Most of them will make the rounds of notable estates as house guests, and the all-year residents are getting up a program of dinners and dances that will surely finish the visitors unless they have iron constitutions.

All in all, we are looking forward to as lively an autumn as we have had in many a year. Society has been rather dull since last summer and every one is on the qui vive to do bigger and better things.

Mme. X Passes; Her Spirit Lives On in Memory

Here, in Her Own Column, Is Final Tribute.

By Nancy R——.

EIGHT weeks ago the facile pen that had fashioned this column of THE CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE so skillfully for more than twenty years was laid aside. The hand that guided that pen, the mind that directed its copy-paper wanderings, were ordered to pause. Their owner was to lie abed and regain some of the physical strength that had been so liberally expended year after year. Rest and relaxation were imperative.

Madame X resting! It seemed unbelievable. Any one who knew her will tell you so. Yet there she was, flat on her back in the gay little green bedroom of her cherished cottage at the Tree-O in Lake Forest. The doctor said she might see only her family. Her incoming telephone service was discontinued. [How well her sister knew her!] "Quiet Zone" signs were posted on the street, and the Tree-O household went to bed early.

THE TRIBUNE asked the R—— family to fill the Madame X column until its right proprietor should be well again.

During those fleeting weeks an idea was born on the Tree-O. Why not erect in the famous p. p. p. [the X family's "pillar of polite piffle"] a tribute to her whose writings meant so much? Why not an interview with Madame X? Why not a story on society, so called—its importance—its meaning—its value in the community?

Interview Never Took Place.

Many times the writer prepared for the interview, awaiting the right moment, brushing up her shorthand so that whatever Madame X might say would be accurately reported, so that none of her lightning bon mots should be lost in the rush of her conversation.

But the interview never came about. It would have been too great a strain on that slight quota of strength, so generously used in avid questions about her friends and family—about the new puppies next door—the daily supervision of the bird bath and bird-banquet-board outside her bedroom window. The opportune moment never presented itself . . .

A week ago this morning, after more than twelve hours of a deep sleep, Madame X passed away . . . quietly . . . peacefully.

Arriving home from Graceland, where a brief and beautiful service in the midst of her closest friends had consigned all that was material of Madame X to the earth again, the writer found a message from the editor of THE TRIBUNE: Would Nancy

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

R—— write a story about Madame X; about her life—her friends—what she meant to Chicago?

So here is builded a pillar of type in memory of her whose p. p. p. was so dear to Chicago. Not an interview. Not the record she would have given you through this writer. But a story of Madame X humbly written and completely inadequate, a brief and passing tribute from her newspaper and her niece.

There are many personal pictures that might be drawn of Caroline Kirkland. Earliest among them is that of a gay young aunt whose Sunday visits were sources of pure delight to two youthful and somewhat scrawny nieces—an aunt who was never too tired to "roll down hill just once more." There is that more mature woman, never too busy to give help and advice, whose gayety and ready wit were as bountifully dispensed at home as abroad; who knit her family circle close about her by love and tenderness and devotion.

Passionate Loyalty to Chicago.

But the picture for this space is of your friend, that stanch fellow citizen whose love for Chicago amounted to a passion, whose loyalty to her city never wavered, even when, as she so aptly said, that city's soiled dress occasionally peeped out from beneath its nice clean apron.

It's the picture of a woman stepping briskly along Michigan avenue, pointing with pride and a slender walking stick to the old water works tower, and saying: "You know I saved that for Chicago. It's pretty ugly, but it means something and that's what counts. It's a symbol of Chicago's youth, a monument to Tradition. And tradition is important."

"Returning to Chicago after several months' absence," she wrote a few years ago, "is like coming home to an affectionate, busy, vigorous mother. Her voice is loud and cheerful. Her embrace is warm. If your heart has withered and shriveled in exile, it opens as do those Chinese paper flowers, or birds, or fish when put in water. There's no city quite like this one—at least, this seems so to a native born Chicagoite."

So that when Count Hermann Keyserling in his "Travel Diary" wrote that Chicago was "awful" she was moved to quick defense.

"Chicago is 'awful,' says that interesting, brilliant, self-styled philosopher. . . . He has girdled the earth with his meditations. . . . He dawdled in Burma . . . dallied in China . . . sauntered in Japan. . . .

"He admired the scenery of our western coast. . . . Then he came here, took one brief look at us, and shouted, 'Chicago is awful!'

"It is wonderful to be able to size up so swiftly a community that in eighty-eight years has sprung up in a wilderness and made itself the fourth city in size on the globe and the second in importance in this western hemisphere. He took as brief a time in making up his mind as did Rudyard Kipling in 1888, when, in a thirty-six hour stay here, during which he held intercourse with only one mortal, a cabman, he came to much the same conclusion.

"Evidently we don't make a good first impression. Our face is our misfortune. . . .

"I doubt if he came in contact with our university, if he visited Hull house, if he had any inkling of our city plan commission.

"He was probably a babe spewing up his self-soured milk when that most radiant of all earthly visions, the Columbian World's fair, rose on the lake shore here and amazed and inspired mankind of that time."

Recognized City's Faults.

Hers was by no means a blind devotion. She saw Chicago's faults, but she saw them tolerantly, hopeful that by careful guidance they might be outgrown. She knew Chicago's virtues and power, and extolled them. With gentle insistence she set before you countless things that really matter in the world—adherence to proper standards, development of both inward and outward beauty, cultivation of the true and the worth while.

She marveled at the adaptability of our countrymen to fit in anywhere, while she decried the faithlessness of those who builded fortunes here and lavished them elsewhere. Speaking of a certain Chicago woman, she once wrote: "Although she was born and brought up in Chicago, she is said to have no tuggings at the heartstrings when she hears the name of this western metropolis. She belongs utterly and entirely to the land of her adoption, in this manifesting that curious quality not uncommon among her countrywomen, but almost unknown among other women of other nationalities.

"No matter how long an English woman or a French woman lives in an alien land, no matter how delightful the conditions of this life abroad may be, it is always exile, and the chance to return to the land of her birth gives each of them a thrill unequaled by any of life's other adventures."

To Caroline Kirkland life was a thrilling experience, not always easy but always interesting and exciting.

Nothing that crossed her path during the day or night was too inconspicuous to be worthy of attention. Everything that happened to her happened to her consciousness, from political campaigns and prohibition to the arrival of her daily paper "with a whack at 5:30 a. m. . . . even getting ahead of that notoriously early bird, the milkman, by a full hour."

She shared her experience in other corners of the land with all of us—her meeting in England with that grand old statesman "Tay Pay" O'Connor—her joy in the beauties of a Palm Beach court garden, where she wrote to the accompaniment of a "gently garrulous" fountain—the sea lions and pelicans that were her friends at La Jolla, in California. "There is nothing else in all nature," she wrote from there, "unless it be a Presbyterian elder, so sedate, so meditative, so self-important as a well developed pelican. I like 'em and should like to have one as a friend. It would tend to steady one and help one take life seriously."

Her beliefs were deep rooted, her vision always forward. A friend, speaking of her a few days ago, said: "She had the dignity and tradition of the nineteenth century and all the vitality of the twentieth."

A Race Between Lights.

On New Year's morning three years ago she wrote: "This is the moment when it behooves us, you and me, to take stock of ourselves and our mortal and immortal equipment. Life as we live it is a good deal like the present mode of locomotion up or down a modern thoroughfare as taken, say, in a taxicab. It is just a race between green lights. Breathlessly we try to get there before the yellow and then the red light pops out. There is no time to pause and contemplate either the distant landscape or the nearer passerby. We are rushing to some goal. Whatever it be, it is of less importance than is the speed with which we reach it."

And, a few months later: "Our forbears belonged to the age when trouble and care were considered as wholesome and part of the discipline necessary for the development of our immortal souls. Perhaps they were right. It remains to be seen what kind of soul is evolved from the mechanical luxuries with which our daily lives are surrounded."

A Beautiful Tribute.

No more beautiful tribute will ever be written than that which appeared a few mornings ago in the columns of a Chicago newspaper, written by a sister scribe younger in years than Miss Kirkland, but blessed, too, with insight, wit, and wisdom:

"There is no reckoning what a tremendous lot of good Miss Kirkland has done in her cheerful, eventful life. Every worthy charity organization in the city has been helped in carrying on its work by her appealing and enlightening stories of their aims. And the fashionable world owes her a great debt for the dignity and understanding with which she treated its serious and successful efforts through the years to make Chicago a city of culture and beauty. She had wit and charm, gayety and taste, and complete fearlessness to expose silly vanities and bad manners when no individual might be embarrassed or hurt.

"She used to say that she held up the mirror to reflect the 'passing show' of society, but she did much more than that—she reflected her own kindness of heart and her bright personality, which all of us who knew her and read her columns will miss. Even the Orphans of the Storm—several of whom she had adopted and made her lifelong friends—will wonder why she had to leave her little Lake Forest garden."

There is much that we would like to say of her who was friend to so many. There is much that will never be said—only cherished in those memory corners whence no one can rout or harm them.

She has written the story of her life for you a thousand times over.

And she has laid down her work—at last—unwillingly.

MRS. RICHARD BAKER WILLIAMS.

Harbor Point Is Scene of Much Social Activity

Gay Parties, Golf and Boating Predominate.

HARBOR POINT, Mich., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—Luncheons and dinners are beginning to be popular at the Harbor Point club, and this week Mrs. J. S. Calfee of St. Louis had a party of twelve guests for luncheon. Katherine Taylor, Kansas City, had luncheon for a party of seven. New guests at the club include Mr. and Mrs. Luther Thomas and Miss Elaine Thomas of Grosse Pointe.

Down at the new Little Harbor Yacht club there seems to be a constant round of social activities and gay parties. Mrs. J. M. Studebaker, South Bend, who with Mr. Studebaker have been vacationing in the north, entertained ten at dinner there this week. Mrs. Frank Pierce of Chicago, who is at the Pierce cottage on the Point, had a party of twenty-five at a rather jolly affair. Another Chicago matron to play hostess at a luncheon was Mrs. S. Burnet, whose guests numbered just twelve. Mrs. S. Patterson's party for twelve guests was given on Friday at the club and was a delightful affair.

The golfing tourneys at the Point Country club are growing daily in interest with increased attendance. Mrs. R. F. Rogan of Cincinnati was the winner of the first ladies' handicap tournament, being given a hard battle by Miss Helen Smith and Mrs. W. K. Crawford of Chicago, who tied for second and third places. Some of the golfers seen out the last day or two were Le Roy Kramer, R. W. Hyman, E. H. Smith, B. T. Gifford, O'Neil Ryan Jr., J. R. Offield, Mrs. R. C. Wheeler, William Waller Jr., Chicago; J. M. Studebaker, South Bend; L. H. Jones, Detroit, and C. F. Cunningham, South Bend.

Plan Riding Meet.

Not all have been racing or golfing, for many are finding the horseback riding ideal this season, and in addition to their daily rides are practicing for the annual Junior Gymkhana which John W. Milet of the Point and Cincinnati is conducting for Friday, Aug. 29. A large number will participate, the events including those for mother and daughter, father and son, family, and son and daughter, and for individuals. Society will flock to the riding club for this occasion.

Among the Chicago men here who have been trying the twenty-seven hole course at Wequetonsing are W. C. Cummings, A. D. Archibald, E. H. Adams, W. B. Baker, Wells Sinclair, B. W. Stevenson, A. H. Emerson, George Keys Jr., and W. L. Logan. W. D. Scott, Evanston, also has been there, as has T. B. Dyche of the same city and Mayor W. B. Harrison, Louisville.

Cecil Gamble, commodore of the Harbor Point club, is in charge of a series of sailboa races for the prune class boats at the Point this season and is organizing them into a series of two races a week for the remainder of the season. Four different courses have been laid out and seven trophies are being offered. Winners for the first race were Henry Meier and Fred Meier of St. Louis, who slipped around the course in clever style in their "Hindoo." In the next David and Edward Pierce, Chicago, came in second. Then the race was on and now these two are tied for first and second, each coming in ahead once and in second place once.

Boat Races, Too.

Robert Burnet and B. O'Brien of Chicago are sailing the Swan, which is in third place in the standings, while Thatcher Waller of Chicago and Edward Limberg of St. Louis are sailing the Lorebee. This ship and the Pippin, sailed by Smith Heckenlooper and Gordon Heckenlooper of Cincinnati, are tied for fourth and fifth places, while the Teal, sailed by Le Roy Kramer Jr. and Henry Kramer of Chicago, is in sixth place.

The Hindoo, Spark Plug, Swan and Lorebee all are championship craft, each having won the season's honors in years gone by, when sailed by men now too old for the prune class ships. One course takes the boats up past Forest beach and return, while another is over to the Harbor Springs wharf, east to Wequetonsing and return. The third and longer course includes all of these points. The course sailed depends on the weather on Wednesdays and Saturdays, the regular days for this sport.

There are to be eight races, with the season closing with the Yacht club dinner and ball at the Point clubhouse on Saturday, Aug. 30. The racing committee is made up of Frank Pierce Jr., Chicago; Duncan Meier Jr., Cincinnati; G. Nugent Monro, Pittsburgh, and B. B. Culver, St. Louis. All of the members are graduates of the prune class racing and are talking up plans for a two-ship race for class C boats. They would match sailing skill between the Pelican, owned by C. C. Culver, and the Flamingo, owned by a syndicate of former prune boat racers. If the race is held the crews will be composed of graduates of the prune class racing at the Point and is expected to create a lot of interest.

Lowest Prices Now Offered on Furs!

Chicago furriers last week did a thriving business. Representatives of the Chicago Tribune who visited a number of shops early last week found them well filled with women shoppers. The reports of the merchants are that it was not the idle curious who came to their shops, but buyers intent upon taking advantage of the unusual opportunities told of in the advertisements. "We're not making much money," one of the leading furriers said, "but we are selling a surprising number of coats."

Women are going to the shops and buying furs because they know bargains when they see them, and current offerings are genuine bargains. Furriers insisted upon and got lower prices when they bought the skins early this year. In the regular fall prices, the consumer is given the full benefit of the savings on skins. These prices have been reduced still further in the August sales. It's a great time to buy a fur coat.

Field-Coats Wedding on Near Horizon

Ramifications of Bride's Family Numerous.

By May Birkhead.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1930: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS.—[Special.]—The marriage of Marshall Field III. to the widow of Capt. Dudley Coats, which is scheduled to take place in a week or so, recalls the numerous connections of the bride's family on both sides of the Atlantic and the channel.

The late Capt. Dudley Coats, who descended from the well known family of thread manufacturers in Paisley, Scotland, died three years ago. His father, Stuart Auchincloss Coats, is the son of Sir James Coats, who in the year 1857 married Sarah Auchincloss of New York.

Capt. Coats' brother, James, in the year 1917 became the husband of Lady Amy Gordon-Lennox, the daughter of the duke of Richmond. Two of Capt. Coats' uncles married American women; Alfred Coats taking as his bride Elizabeth Barnwall of Flushing, L. I., while Annie Coats was wedded some years ago to George Gordon King of Newport, while still another aunt, Alice Coats, was married in 1885 to Theodore Frelinghuysen of New Jersey.

Mother Well Known Hostess

Mrs. Dudley Coats, who becomes in a few days the bride of Marshall Field III., is the daughter of the late William Dodge James of Sussex, England, and New Brunswick, Canada. His wife, the mother of Mrs. Dudley Coats, has long been an outstanding hostess in London, where for many years she has been known as the beautiful Mrs. Willy James and was one of the small group of clever women who were close friends of the late King Edward. In fact, this monarch acted as sponsor of the baptism of James, the first son, who is Mrs. Dudley Coats' elder brother.

Mrs. Charles H. Schweppe, with her two children, has also been a summer visitor to the Riviera and has just returned to Paris to rejoin her husband.

Mrs. John Towne is here for a short visit and is stopping at the Ritz after traveling in Switzerland. Mrs. Paul Healy has just returned from Aix-Les-Bains

The papal medal, highest honor which can be conferred by the Roman Catholic church upon a laywoman, has been awarded Dr. Ellen Ryan Jolly of Pawtucket, R. I., by Pope Pius XI. in recognition of her work for the church. She was formerly national president of the ladies' auxiliary of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and wrote "Nuns of the Battlefield," a volume devoted to the work of nuns in the civil war.

Stars Forecast Long Fight for India Freedom

DELHI, India.—(AP)—The Universal Astrological and Statistical bureau, forecasting India's fight for freedom, says independence will not be achieved until May [illegible] 1942.

It is predicted that until that time the struggle will go on continuously.

The prediction says that Mahatma Gandhi will be released from prison about Dec. 17 and that an "adverse aspect of the stars" indicates the downfall of the MacDonald cabinet and defeat of the Labor party in Great Britain next October.

Dakota Pastor Helps Farmers with Problems

Practical Ministry Is Proving Effective.

By the Rev. John Evans.

AT the end of a tour of several thousand miles, in which he studied rural church problems, Prof. Carl H. Hutchinson of the Chicago Theological seminary stated that he found only one minister who felt called upon to give farmers suggestions on farm methods. The pastor who thus could be called an agricultural missionary is the Rev. Peter Ruder of the German Congregational church, Kulm, N. D. According to the Rev. Mr. Ruder's own statement, the Kulm pastor preaches the Christian gospel on Sundays and the agricultural gospel on week days.

Prof. Hutchinson declared that Pastor Ruder had come to grips with some of the fundamental causes of hard times in the wheat country of North Dakota. The Chicago professor discovered that the pastor had found ways to make his people feel his interest in their physical problems as well as problems of their souls.

"Two things are ruining our farmers," Pastor Ruder told me, said Prof. Hutchinson. "They are the tractor and the automobile. The tractor has resulted in too much wheat and the automobile consumes gasoline that the farmers do not produce, but have to pay for. Our farmers have made themselves slaves. The old generation that toiled on these farms, lugging off rocks and breaking the sod, are, for the most part, unable to work. Some of those who are left are living in Kulm. They cannot support themselves. Others have lost their farms because they worked too hard trying to farm too much.

Pastor Ruder urges his people not to work so hard trying to raise enormous crops of wheat, according to Prof. Hutchinson. He advocates the return to horse farming by junking their tractors, and declare that "most farmers have only learned how to raise crops, but have not learned to follow the markets."

"Many men have been made wealthy by following one principle," Pastor Ruder asserted, as he discussed his relationship to farm economics with Prof. Hutchinson. "That principle is, 'Buy things when they are down and sell when they are going up. Our farmers do just the opposite. They see others buying and they see prices rising, and they get excited and buy. Then when prices go down they get discouraged and sell.

"I try to encourage the farmers to use their heads. One thing I am constantly reminding the farmer members of my congregation: 'Everything that goes up must come down, and everything that goes down must some time come up. Right now hogs are down. I am telling my parishioners that now is the time to buy some pigs to eat some of the surplus cheap grain. Hogs will come back. Cheap hogs tend to make scarce hogs—but the packers must have hogs."

Prof. Hutchinson spoke with enthusiasm of Pastor Ruder's ministry and declared that successful ministerial work in agricultural regions may some time demand a closer relationship between agricultural schools and theological seminaries.

Mrs. William F. Kerns, coloratura soprano, accompanied by her daughter, Marion Meyer, will sing today at the dedication of St. Anthony of Padua church, Rockford, Ill. Dedication ceremonies will consist of a high mass in which the Rt. Rev. Edward F. Hoban, bishop of the Rockford diocese, will officiate.

Waveland Avenue Congregational church has, during the last month, celebrated the eighteenth anniversary of the Rev. Edward Lawrence Reiner as pastor.

The Rev. Francis M. Flaherty will lecture Wednesday night at the August meeting of the Holy Name Cathedral Convert league on "Unity of the Church." The meeting will be held in lower assembly hall, 11 East Chicago avenue. Father Flaherty is the spiritual director of the Convert league, which is sponsored by the Rev. Joseph P. Morrison, administrator of the Holy Name cathedral, and was originated as a parochial activity of the cathedral parish.

The Rev. Campbell M. Macleroy, who has been filling Dr. Asa J. Ferry's pulpit during the latter's vacation, comes from Glasgow where for twenty years he occupied the pulpit of Victoria Park church. He served for a time as Y. M. C. A. secretary in France during the war and for a year as chaplain.

During the Rev. Mr. Macleroy's visit in Chicago he has, in addition to preaching at the Edgewater Presbyterian church, taken courses at the Presbyterian Theological seminary.

The Chicago circuit of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America will observe Augsburg confession Sunday at Long Lake, Ill., on Aug. 24. All churches of Chicago and vicinity are sending delegates or are going in large groups to attend one or more of the specially arranged programs of the day. Dr. C. O. Solberg, dean of the Chicago Lutheran Bible school and one of the foremost speakers in the Lutheran church of today, will give an address on the Augsburg confession. There will be special music and singing at this quadricentennial celebration of the Augsburg confession.

The Rev. William Tait Paterson, pastor of the Norwood Presbyterian church, Cincinnati, O., will speak at the Fourth Presbyterian church at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. today. There will be an organ recital and vesper service at 4 p. m.

THE REV. DR. GEORGE L. ROBINSON.

Dr. Robinson, professor of biblical literature at the Presbyterian Theological seminary, has returned from a two months' speaking tour in Great Britain under the auspices of the council on interchange of preachers and speakers between Great Britain and the United States.

The Chicago professor arrived in England early in May and launched his mission of international friendship and good will at Plymouth, where he addressed a massmeeting under the auspices of the Plymouth district Free Church council. His subject was "What America Is Thinking Today."

At London Dr. Robinson was received by the interchange committee at a luncheon in his honor at the English Speaking union, with Viscount Leverhulme presiding. He addressed the opening session of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church of Scotland, and later spoke from well known pulpits in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Paisley, Aberdeen, Manchester, Portsmouth, and again in London.

At Aberdeen the lord bishop of that city, Bishop Deane, who recently visited Chicago and was a Sunday Evening club speaker at Orchestra hall, was one of Dr. Robinson's distinguished hosts.

Revive Plan for Another Port in South France

VILLEFRANCHE, France.—(AP)—The French government has revived a scheme for remodeling this port which would have far-reaching effects on tourist travel.

It is proposed to build regular docks, provide storage space, construct a new rail line to Digne, Grenoble, and Lyons, and thus make Villefranche the recognized port for travelers to Switzerland, Austria, and South Germany.

The plan was originally formulated in 1913, but was dropped when war broke out. Since 1920 the number of travelers on the southern route has increased so rapidly that it is being studied again.

It is contended that the freight traffic alone would justify the cost. The Italian steamship companies view the plan with alarm, since it would divert traffic from Genoa.

American Paintings at Knoedler's

Representative Group of Canvases, Full of Color and Versatility, Wins High Praise of Critic

By Eleanor Jewett.

THE exhibition of American paintings which is this summer's attraction in the Knoedler galleries is one of the most brilliant exhibits to have been arranged in any of the Chicago galleries this year. It is surpassingly fine, both in detail and considering the canvases as a group. It is a superb summary of American achievement in art.

Delicate and virginal in coloring is the exquisite forest glade which A. H. Wyant painted under the title, "Silver Birches." The sun strikes through the green leaves, gently silvering them, and the shadows and sun, the deep notes and the light, dance in a breeze which caresses the silver trunks of the timid birches with a touch as light and frolicsome as that of a kitten's paw, claws sheathed, patting a flying leaf.

Daniel Garber is represented by "The Antique Shop," a delightful effort in pure color, bearing certain of the marks of the modernist school but infinitely to be preferred to the usual modern canvas on account of its precision of craftsmanship and fascinating juxtaposition of colors.

Two paintings by Bruce Crane flank a wistful landscape in browns by J. Francis Murphy. Of the Crane pictures, "Early Morning" is misty, brown and gray; "December Greys" is equally beautifully painted, the world hushed, the fallen leaves lying like scattered ashes, the ashes of summer, summer sacrificed to December, in gray and green and blue.

Noted for Winter Paintings.

Walter Palmer, who throughout a long life has been noted for his winter landscapes, is represented by two large paintings of snow and ice clad river with green conifers standing guard. George Inness is represented by an unusual and extremely beautiful landscape, "Looking Over the Hudson at Milton." In the foreground green trees make a frame for a distance which might have come from Perugia, so soft its contours are. There is a soft, shy horizon line that quickens the imagination. In the foreground the colors are sharper and the details delightfully precise.

Among the other paintings are a magnificent Maxfield Parrish, "Winter," by Rockwell Kent; "Washday," by Robert Spencer; "Portrait of a Child," by Mary Cassatt, "The Japanese Book," by William M. Chase, "Sheep Shearers," by Horatio Walker; "Mending," by Gari Melchers, and "Gloucester," by Childe Hassam.

Artists on Summer Jaunts.

Apparently one of the most attractive and successful of the summer schools of painting is the Black River Painting camp under the direction of Arthur N. Colt, who directs the Colt School of Art in Madison, Wis.

A note from the Chicago painter, Edward T. Grigware, gives the jolly news, jolly at least from his point of view and from the point of view of all others who can be out of town this summer, that he and Holger Jensen are visiting John A. Spelman in Mr. Spelman's studio camp, Spruce Point lodge, Thorsen's Harbor, Hovland, Minn. That should be far enough north for any one yet the artists, with wives and sketching materials, are going on a little further to Ile Royale, an almost complete wilderness, where they will camp and paint.

Joseph Birren is keeping more closely to civilization. An announcement from California tells of a one man exhibit of his paintings in Los Angeles during August. Mr. Birren is a prolific and able painter. His work has character, individuality, and beauty.

Modern Currier and Ives Prints.

An important note is sounded in this item concerning prints. The grandson of one of the founders of the famous printing house, Currier & Ives, has revived the old name with a resumption of producing Currier & Ives prints, but in the modern spirit. The subjects listed are modern sporting events: The Dempsey-Tunney fight; the Tilden-La Coste tennis match; Man O' War Winning the Belmont Sweepstakes; Bobby Jones Winning the British Open, and so on and so forth.

The first print of the first series is now waiting shipment. The complete series may be subscribed for, or prints may be had singly. The prints are not in the old style lithography, but in the new process intagliotone, an intricate method susceptible to delicacies of color and softness of effect. The Chicago allotment of the new Currier & Ives prints may be found in the Walden-Dudensing gallery, 546 North Michigan avenue.

News of Art and Artists.

Keith Ward, who studied under Felix Schmidt at the National Academy of Art last winter, has illustrated two amusing books this year. One, a book of games, appeared in April. The second, "Jolly Animals," will be published this month. A third book he is at work on now is promised for the last of the year.

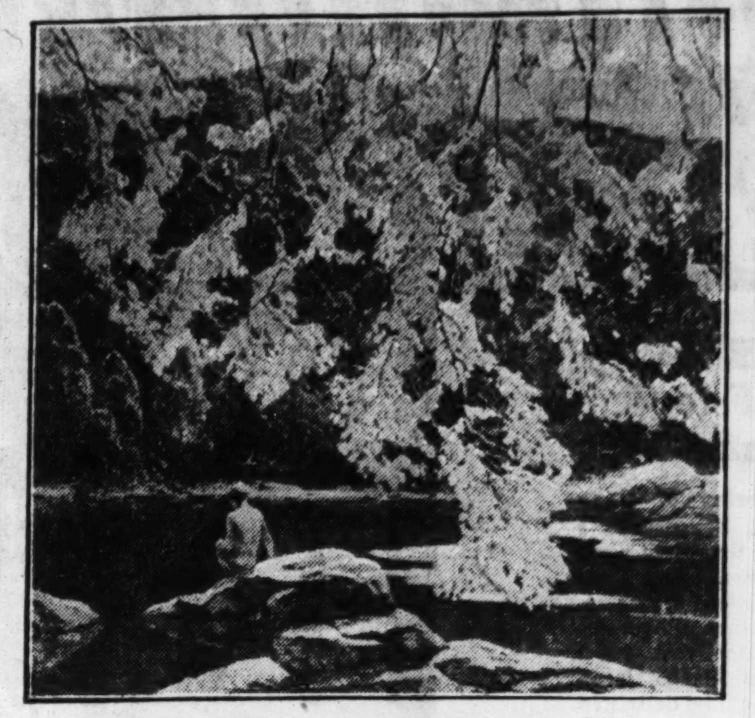
Norman E. Wright is one of our artists who is painting in the east this summer. He and Mrs. Wright have taken a house near Dorset, Vt., and have turned the second floor into a studio. Mr. Wright won much favorable comment last winter both here and in New York with his charming, prim portrait of "Emily."

He is now engaged on a portrait of his wife, and before leaving for the east he finished a successful portrait of Mrs. Howard Moses.

A new name among Chicago artists is Louise Mishell, who comes heralded with extremely favorable and enthusiastic criticisms from New York and Paris. She studied in the Chicago Art institute, in Moscow, and in Paris. She is to have her painting of a woman, "The Nasty B," exhibited this winter in the Art Institute. The Cochrane gallery in Washington has invited her to send as many pictures as she can this winter for exhibition. All told, it would seem wise to keep an eye open for the work of this new star, Louise Mishell.

The Walden-Dudensing galleries are introducing the work of Conrad Kramer to Chicago. He is a New York painter and has exhibited at the Carnegie. His work is mature, modern, and decorative. It is purely personal, original, and, it is boasted, not derivative in any sense.

An exhibition of aeronautical prints and models is on view in the Lakeside Press galleries and is well worth a visit. Flying, from its beginnings with Icarus, is depicted in all its stages. Humor, beauty and knowledge are mingled to make the exhibit entertaining as well as instructive. Probably these prints will never again be reassembled, and while they are here they should not be missed.



"THE BRANCH," by Rudolph F. Ingerle, to be seen in his group of paintings comprising one of the most delightful of the current summer exhibits at the Art institute. Mr. Ingerle is a well known Chicago painter belonging to the band of conservative artists who are keeping the middle west alive in the imagination of the public by the beauty of their pictures.

Ex-Kaiser Victor in Rifle Contest; Proxy Does It

SAABOR, Silesia.—(AP)—Ex-Kaiser Wilhelm has won the chief prize for marksmanship at this Silesian home of his consort, Hermine.

The win, however, was scored by proxy. Max Sauermann, a baker, was deputed, as senior member of the Sharpshooters' guild, to "shoot for the kaiser"—the absent patron of the competition.

And so it is to a baker's dozen bull's-eyes scored by a substitute that the ex-kaiser owes his new title of "King of the Saabor Sharpshooters."

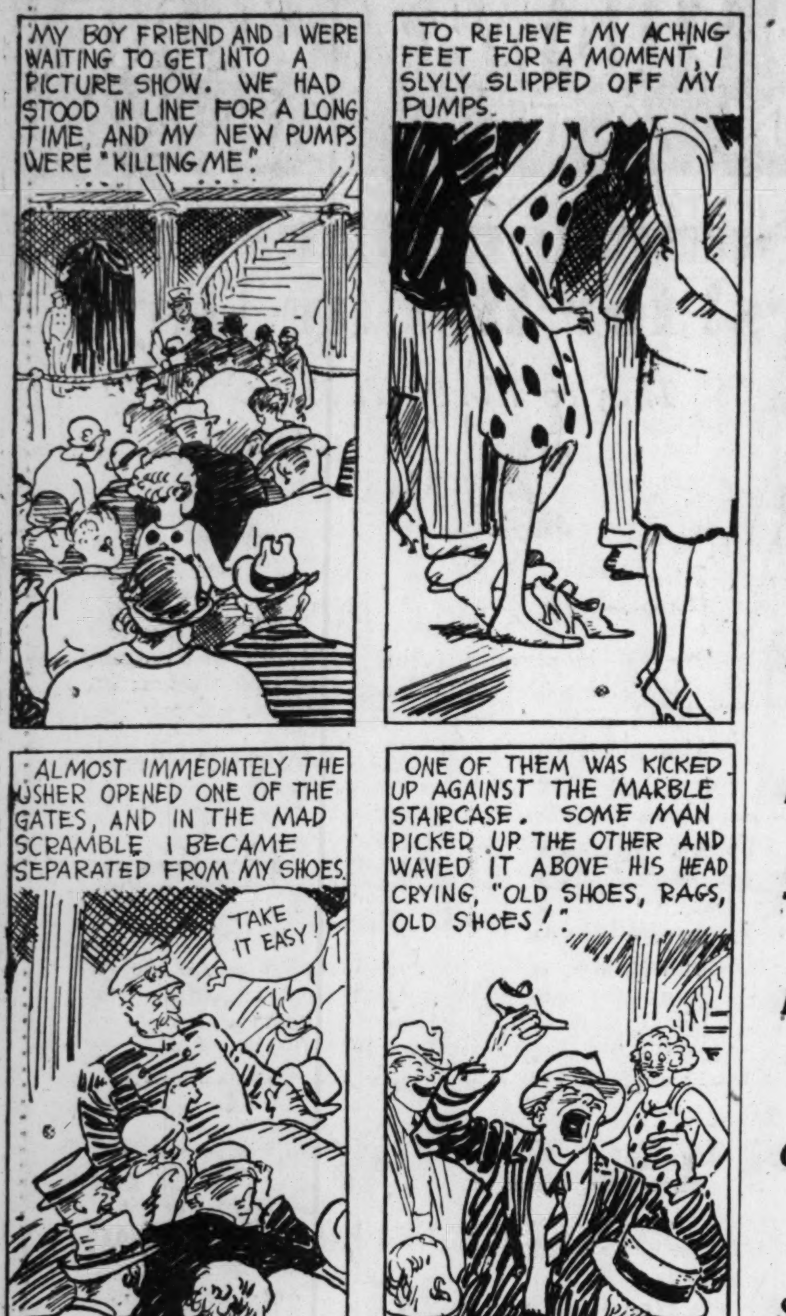
EMBARRASSING MOMENTS



MY BOY FRIEND AND I WERE WAITING TO GET INTO A PICTURE SHOW. WE HAD STOOD IN LINE FOR A LONG TIME, AND MY NEW PUMPS WERE "KILLING ME."
TO RELIEVE MY ACHING FEET FOR A MOMENT, I SLYLY SLIPPED OFF MY PUMPS.
ALMOST IMMEDIATELY THE USHER OPENED ONE OF THE GATES, AND IN THE MAD SCRAMBLE I BECAME SEPARATED FROM MY SHOES.
TAKE IT EASY!
ONE OF THEM WAS KICKED UP AGAINST THE MARBLE STAIRCASE. SOME MAN PICKED UP THE OTHER AND WAVED IT ABOVE HIS HEAD CRYING, "OLD SHOES, RAGS, OLD SHOES!"

What was the most embarrassing moment of your life? If you care to have it published address Embarrassing Moments, Chicago Tribune. Please write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned.

Same Thought.

My most embarrassing moment occurred last summer while I was visiting in a little Ohio town. The sole amusement center was a small dance hall located in the heart of town. One of the young men of the town who lived a little further down the road than I and whom I did not particularly favor made a habit of walking home with me each evening. On this particular Saturday night his company proved more boresome than usual and he claimed all my dances. I remarked how tired I was and how anxious I was to get home. It was nine o'clock when he brought me home and after leaving me, I naturally thought he went on home. As the evening was still young, I walked back to the dance hall. Maybe you can feature my embarrassment when I tell you I came face to face with the gentleman who escorted me home just twenty minutes before at the entrance. A. E. I.

Some Spill.

Thinking to alleviate the grief entailed upon the whole family when we went up to the log cabin to stay for the summer, I went up last weekend, taking my mother-in-law along with me to help set the place in order. We loaded up the back of the car with all manner of old clothes which we save for the woods, canned goods for the larder, sundry linen, blankets and extra dishes and bedroom ware.

After a railroad crossing where a long string of cars were held up ahead of us I tried jockeying for a position and in so doing was in great danger of running up against another car from the opposite direction. To avoid a collision or damaging the car in front I drove for the small fence across the road. The shoulder gave way and a deep ditch I had not reckoned with was under the growing weeds. We turned on our side to the consternation of all those watching. Luckily, apart from broken glass, a minor scratch on the lady's hand and on my elbow we were not hurt. Ready helpers got us out and as I stretched myself and came to look around at the spill there were strange looks on the faces of the bystanders for everything possibly embarrassing had been thrown out of the car. I never felt so cheap in my life. It was quite a task trying to explain that we were not in the junk or old clothes business, but bound for the north to our summer camp. H. A. S.

No Foreign Money.

I was working in a ten cent store. One day a lady came in and bought some things and handed me a $10 gold piece. I had never seen gold money before. I looked up at the lady and said: "Sorry, ma'am, but we do not take foreign money." L. A. L.

Two Views of Radio Announcer.

One day while visiting a new acquaintance she remarked, "Don't you think that announcer has a lovely voice?" indicating the radio from which we were hearing the ball game.

Just to show my art of criticism I launched into a speech, naming his faults and concluded with, "I certainly pity his wife, having a man with a voice like that around."

Mrs. F. looked at me queerly for a moment and then said, "O, but I'm perfectly happy!" E. S.

Letters from Martha Freem Esmond to her friend Julia Bo of New York.

January 26, 1874.

DEAR JULIA:

Your description of you own kettledrum was cer tainly of the greatest help to me in planning mine. Now that it is all over I want to write you about it, for I consider that it was your party as well as mine.

I took your hint about informal ity as the keynote of the affai and wrote the word "Informal" in the left hand lower corner o the card, so the guests knew the were not expected to wear eve ning dress. I really think peopl enjoy a party much more whe they aren't too much dressed u Don't you? I invited sixty peopl and, much to my surprise, foun I had fifty acceptances. I ha rather counted on more refusal so the parlors of our Rush stre house were jammed. But, I r flect, that always seems to ind cate a successful party.

The guests were invited, as yo suggested, for six o'clock, a they came quite promptly on th hour. The ladies took off the wraps up in the front bedroo and the gentlemen used the gue room for their coats and ov shoes.

We were seated at the tables 6:30, which was doing pretty we I thought.

DEAR JULIA:

Your description of your own kettledrum was certainly of the greatest help to me in planning mine. Now that it is all over I want to write you about it, for I consider that it was your party as well as mine.

I took your hint about informality as the keynote of the affair and wrote the word "Informal" in the left hand lower corner of the card, so the guests knew they were not expected to wear evening dress. I had rather counted on more refusals, so the parlors of our Rush street house were jammed. But, I reflect, that always seems to indicate a successful party.

The guests were invited, as you suggested, for six o'clock, and they came quite promptly on the hour. The ladies took off their wraps up in the front bedroom and the gentlemen used the guest-room for their coats and overshoes.

We were seated at the tables by 6:30, which was doing pretty well, I thought.

Dr. and Mrs. R. W. Patterson were present, and Dr. Patterson said grace. The magnificent stature and genial presence of Dr. Patterson always add so much to any occasion, I feel. I was reminded of the time we saw him stand back to back with President Lincoln when the latter was entertained at the William H. Brown home on Michigan avenue in 1860.

But to return to the kettledrum. Our refreshments were cold turkey with sliced dressing, escaloped oysters, coleslaw, brandied peaches, currant jelly, raised biscuits, mince pie, ice cream, and cake. Coffee was served with the supper. At some of the more formal dinners, I notice, the hostesses are beginning to serve it at the end of the meal, in small cups. But I knew how Will dislikes this way of doing, and I felt that most of the gentlemen would enjoy the simple old-fashioned style to which they are accustomed. I felt I had made a wise choice when Mr. Pullman told me he couldn't endure the new style in coffee drinking and was glad Will and I kept to the good old ways.

Johnny Hand's orchestra furnished the music. No one has any other orchestra at parties here. After supper the tables were cleared away and we played charades. We decided not to have cards or dancing, as so many of our most beloved church friends do not approve of these.

The company was divided into two camps, and each acted out a word while the other side guessed what it was. "Ingratiate," "incomprehensible," "etiquette," and "gladiator" were some of the words acted out.

I think they all had a good, simple, jolly time with games, charades, and general singing. I was tired out when it was over at 10:30, but felt that it had been a great success. Since then I have attended several kettledrums. Indeed, they rage like an epidemic in Chicago at present. But I have the satisfaction of knowing that I gave the very first one in our city. And it's all thanks to you!

One of these parties I attended was at the home of the Perry H. Smiths, 135 East Oak street. It was much more handsome, of course, than mine, for they have a lovely home. The guests presented the host and hostess with a kettledrum with the top off and the whole thing filled with lovely roses. It was quite unique. The Smiths have just returned from a trip abroad and brought with them an immense painting, "The Transfiguration." It is fully ten feet high and six feet wide. They bought it in Rome, and it had just been hung in their parlor. It was much admired by the guests. They have a great deal of statuary, also purchased in Rome.

How I wish we could go abroad! So many of our friends have taken wonderful trips, staying in Rome and other Italian cities for quite a long time. I feel a real back number when I hear them talk. Will and I plan to go some time, but it isn't possible yet.

Another kettledrum I attended was given by Mrs. H. O. Stone, who lives on Prairie avenue. This, like the Smiths', was a much more brilliant affair than ours, but I don't believe it was any jollier. Hand's orchestra played there, too. Mrs. Stone's tea was served at 6:30 o'clock, after which the gentlemen smoked for some time and the ladies visited. Later there was dancing till after midnight.

Mrs. Ludington and Mrs. O. R. Keith are two other ladies who have given beautiful kettledrums.

• • • • • •

Just at that point Will came in to ask me to go over to the Grand Pacific hotel to call on Col. Clark E. Carr of Galesburg and his bride, who are here on their honeymoon. They are very interesting people and we enjoyed our call. We had just taken our leave and were walking down the hall when a frightened bellboy spoke to Will, asking his help. A man from the country, a guest in the hotel, had blown out the gas and was unconscious when the chambermaid went in with fresh towels. He was revived quickly and was quite abashed when he found what he had done. He said sheepishly when he "came to" that he "never knew them darned things turned off an' extinguished theirselves."

Gas is such a convenience I wonder how country people get along without it. Kerosene lamps are such a nuisance. Yet our mothers used these lamps all their lives and never complained. Luxuries soon become necessities.

With love and thinks for your help,

Your old friend,
MARTHA FREEMAN ESMOND.

Foot Notes.

In the days of George III. of England the word "drum" was applied to a crowded and noisy, albeit very fashionable, card playing party at a private house. One often encounters this word in novels dealing with this period in England.

Perhaps the "kettledrum," so popular in America in the '70s, had some connection with the earlier "drum." The dictionary gives its origin as India, where drumheads served as tea tables.

Bengal School Center Hit by Religious Feud

DACCA, Bengal. — (AP) — Dacca, noted as an educational center, is a stagnated city.

Because of its own troubles, at root economic but on the surface due to in intense Hindu-Moslem feud, the agitation by Mahatma Gandhi for the immediate independence of India has been almost unnoticed here.

Hindus and Mohammedans have rioted time and again. The street fighting has been intense, and for weeks the city has been in a state of semi-siege.

Few Students Return.

When the schools and colleges reopened after the long vacation few students returned. Traffic in the thoroughfares is light in the day time and after nightfull virtually nonexistent. Shopkeepers put up their shutters at dusk and hurry home, leaving their places to the care of Gurkha watchmen.

Dacca's troubles are communal and grounded in economic conditions. Formerly the Mohammedans were landowners and the Hindus mostly tenants. Now the rôles are reversed.

The sense of loss is seldom absent from the minds of the Mohammedans, and it matters not that they themselves may have been to blame for the changed condition; the Hindu is always blamed for all the hard luck.

Boycott Is On.

So the two factions have taken to boycotting each other. Hindu employers will not hire Mohammedan workmen, and, worst of all from the Moslem viewpoint, the Hindus have opened six new bazaars where Moslems are not allowed.

A peace committee under the presidency of the district magistrate tried to find a solution for the problem, but after fruitless debate decided it lacked jurisdiction. It only recommended that efforts be made to persuade the Hindus to call off their boycott.

Colombia Drives Gold Spike in New Railroad

BOGOTA (AP)—Colombia, which has surmounted by airplanes the difficulties of passenger transportation over her three ranges of cool mountains, is celebrating the completion of another transportation feat.

A gold spike has just been driven in the Ambalema-Ibague railroad, Mississippi of the country—with the railroad to Bogota.

Fifty miles of treacherous, cliff guarded right of way has been conquered in an engineering battle which lasted three years. In the 50 miles of construction, 17 bridges were erected, thereby setting a record in a country where bridges are indispensable to railroad construction.

The line cost $3,500,000, but it will cut the expense of freight transportion enormously and will reduce by more than a week the time for moving goods from the Atlantic coast to Bogota.

Newport Reception Given in Honor of Anne Kinsolving

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 16.—[Special.]—An event of the week was the reception given by Mrs. John Nicholas Brown at Harbour court, in honor of her son's fiancée, Anne Seddon Kinsolving of Baltimore. All the important members of the colony were present to greet Miss Kinsolving who, with her brother, Herbert Kinsolving, has been the guest of Mrs. Brown at Harbour court for several days. The Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving and Mrs. Kinsolving, parents of the bride-to-be, are here for several days' stay.

Another event was the party given by Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman for her son, Edwin Marston Burke, at Land's End. More than fifty of the youngest members of society were present at the party. Another hostess of the week was Mrs. John Russell Pope, who gave a dinner and dance in honor of the seventeenth birthday of her daughter, Mary. Miss Pope will make her début here next August at Sherwood, the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Henry Walters.

At the annual meeting of the governors of the Spouting Beach association, otherwise Bailey's beach, Edward J. Berwind declined to serve again as president and Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs was appointed to succeed him.

Among the visitors here are Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Phillips Orme of Washington, who are with Mrs. Orme's mother, Mrs. E. H. Elder at Elmhurst; Virginia Thayer of Boston, who is with Miss Lilas Moriarty; J. T. Pratt, who is with Mr. and Mrs. Eugene S. Reynal; Shirley Fisk, who is with Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth Wickes, and Mrs. David Dows, who is with Mrs. I. Townsend Burden.

DREAMS

Have you ever had a dream which later came true? If you care to see it in print address "Dreams," Chicago Tribune.

For Safety.

It was on a Saturday morning when I discovered the loss of my wallet. I was, of course, deeply concerned, due to the fact that it contained various personal memoranda of importance and a $10 bill. I carefully thought of the places I had been for the last twelve hours and the various things that I did but I could not possibly trace or detect any logical reason or clew for its disappearance. Then suddenly out of the depths, came light, an idea, my countenance brightened and I rushed to investigate and "Eureka," it was there.

Well, my dear readers, it was like this. On Friday night we had been honored with visitors, the Rev. J. S. Blank and wife. They accepted our hospitality for the night en route for points east. After a rather quiet but interesting evening, we retired. And then for apparently no reason, I started to dream. I dreamed that the reverend and wife were a couple of crooks and that they were plotting to get my money. After considering the matter carefully, I decided that the safest place for my money would be in my shoe. On the following day when I suddenly recalled the dream. I found that I had actually gotten out of bed in my sleep, taken the wallet out of my trousers and put it in my shoe. C. O. E.

Near Drowning.

We had planned a picnic breakfast at the lake and I was going to learn to swim. The night before the picnic I dreamed that I was in deep water and the water rushing against my legs caused me to lose my balance and fall. I struggled and finally got on my feet, but as soon as I did so the same thing happened again and I was struggling to get on my feet once more when I wakened.

The next morning I had forgotten my dream and went in the water shoulder deep and I had exactly the same experience as in my dream. I had gone down twice and was struggling to get on my feet when one of the girls saw me and, too frightened to move, she called to the girl nearest me, who reached me just as I was getting on my feet. I felt she was coming to help me and reached my hand towards her. She grabbed it, which steadied me and was the only thing that kept me from going down the third and perhaps the last time.

When I was under the water the second time I thought of my dream of the night before. S. H.

Correct.

Several weeks ago I followed Want-Ad Wanda through fourteen ads in the want ad columns, and after clipping them and carefully mounting them in their correct order, I mailed them to THE CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE, confident my work would merit at least a $1 prize. That night I dreamed I was reading the paper which contained the names of the prize winners but my name was missing. Correct! I did not win a prize. I. M.

Gold Is Found.

A neighbor of ours, an old lady, had been saving gold pieces for a number of years in a place nobody knew of, so when she died nobody could find the pieces, though searching all over.

One night my mother dreamed that they had found the gold pieces in an old-fashioned, thick-framed picture.

The next day my mother related her dream to the son and sure enough there was a picture such as mother had dreamed of, and when the back part had been taken out there were the gold pieces. I. G.

"Weather-Wise" Chefs

"HERE it is on the menu! I knew they'd have it!" This kind of tribute to the Morrison kitchens is very frequent with our patrons—especially at midsummer.

The Right Menus for August Days

It's partly foresight and partly experience. Through long practice the Morrison chefs have gained a rare faculty for adapting menus to sudden weather changes.

The New Pastry Shop

On warm August days you always find something to tempt you in all the Morrison restaurants. The new Pastry Shop, opened only recently, has been in great favor throughout the warm season.

Room with Bath, $2.50 Up

Coolness and perfect ventilation prevail in all the guest rooms. All are outside, with bath, running ice-water, bed-head lamp, telephone, and Servidor. Yet the rates are little more than half the charges made elsewhere for similar rooms.

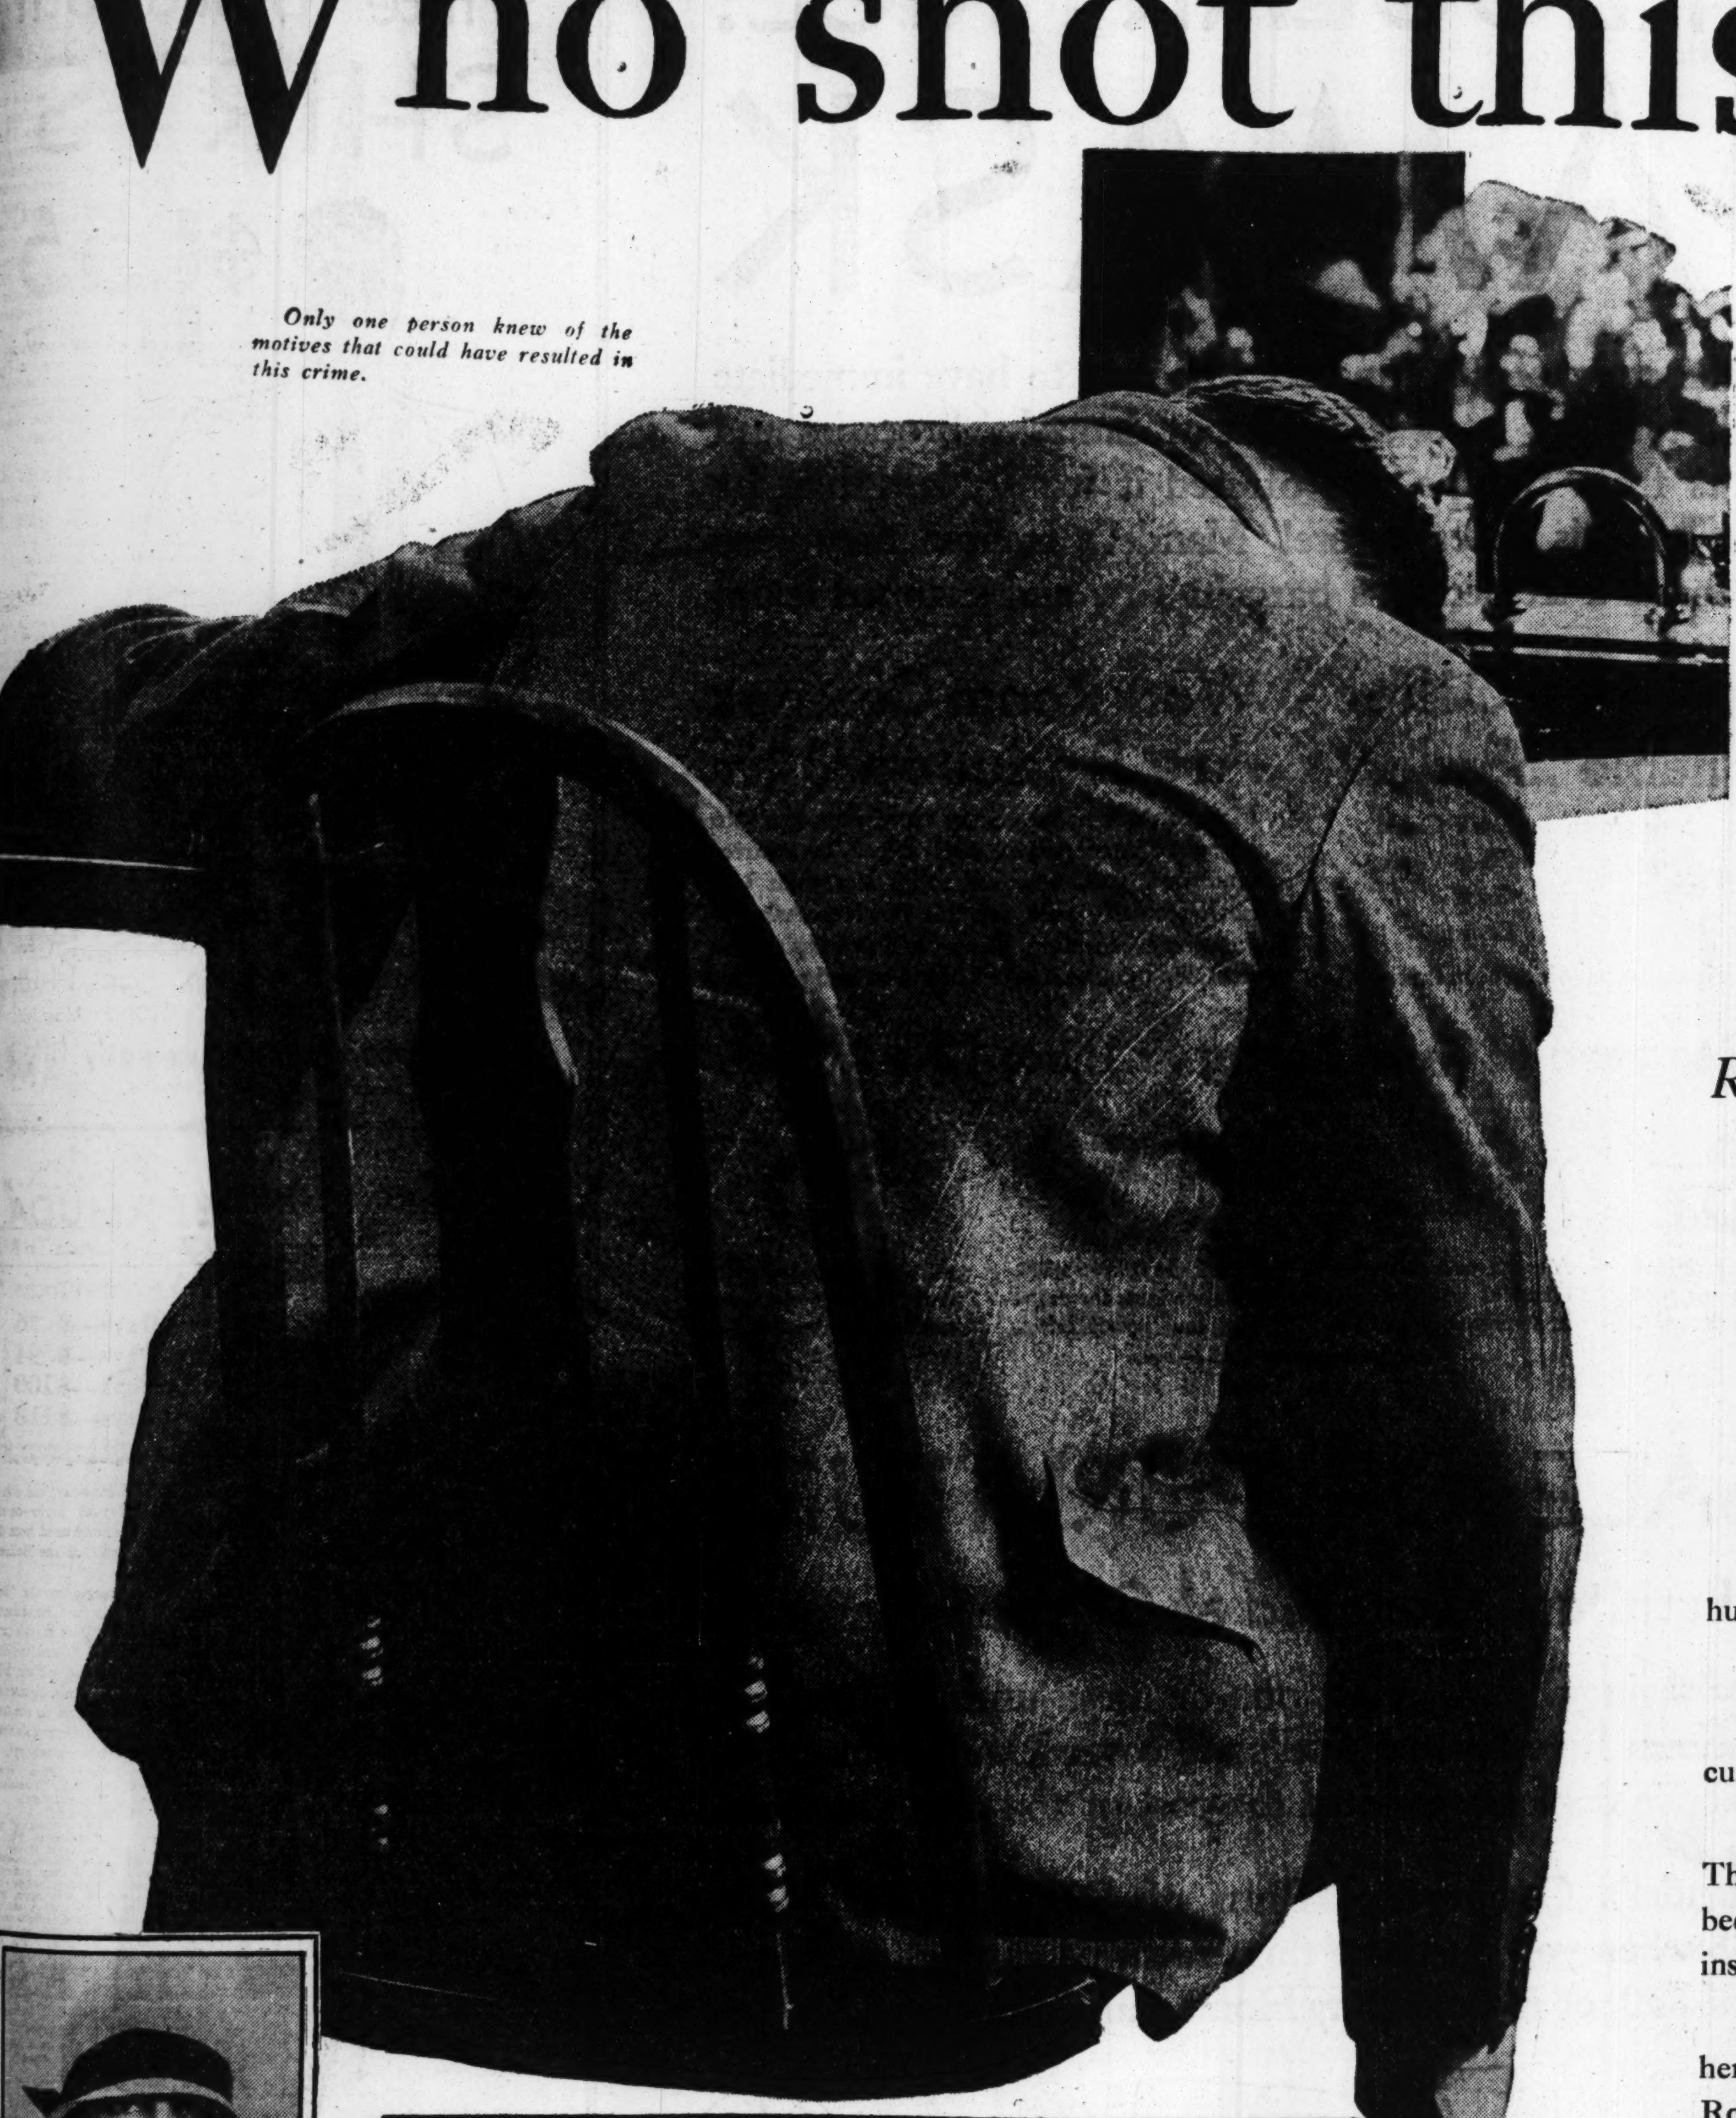
Who shot this man?



Only one person knew of the motives that could have resulted in this crime.

"I DID IT,"
said Lawrence Redding.

"IT WAS I,"
declared the victim's wife.

"I ALONE AM GUILTY," insisted the curate.

Read the Amazing Facts in

THE MURDER AT THE VICARAGE

by Agatha Christie, author of "The Murder of Roger Ackroyd"

Beginning in tomorrow's
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Who shot Colonel Protheroe?

Was it Lawrence Redding, artist and romance hunter?

Was it Anne, the victim's wife?

Was it Hawes, the seemingly gentle young curate?

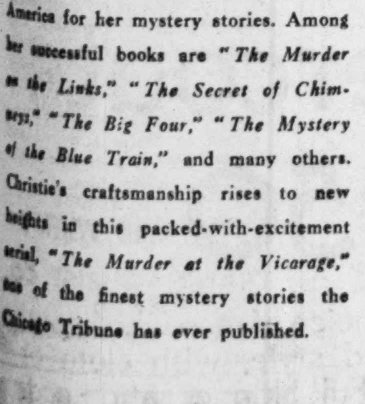
It's up to you to figure it out. All three confess. There are half a dozen motives. It could have been any one of the three. But why do they all insist on shouldering the blame?

Agatha Christie, most famous, perhaps, for her astounding mystery novel, "The Murder of Roger Ackroyd," again has rung the bell with her latest thriller, "The Murder at the Vicarage."

Here's a fast-moving story of intrigue and conflict carried on against the background of a quiet English village. The intricacies of the plot will baffle the most assiduous reader of detective fiction.

Find out all the facts for yourself. Read the first installment given on this page and go on with the story in tomorrow's

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER



Mistress of the plot that piles intrigue on intrigue, Agatha Christie is an English writer famous both in England and America for her mystery stories. Among her successful books are "The Murder on the Links," "The Secret of Chimneys," "The Big Four," "The Mystery of the Blue Train," and many others. Christie's craftsmanship rises to new heights in this packed-with-excitement serial, "The Murder at the Vicarage," one of the finest mystery stories the Chicago Tribune has ever published.

Begin this baffling mystery story now, and read it every day in the Chicago Tribune, starting tomorrow!

INSTALLMENT I.

A BOTHERSOME PARISHIONER

IT is difficult to know quite where to begin this story, but I have fixed my choice on a certain Wednesday at luncheon at the vicarage. The conversation, though in the main irrelevant to the matter in hand, yet contained one or two suggestive incidents which influenced later developments.

I had just finished carving some boiled beef (remarkably tough, by the way), and on resuming my seat I remarked, in a spirit most unbecoming to my cloth, that any one who murdered Col. Protheroe would be doing the world at large a service.

My young nephew, Dennis, said instantly:

"That'll be remembered against you when the old boy is found bathed in blood. Mary will give evidence, won't you, Mary? And describe how you brandished the carving knife in a vindictive manner."

Mary, who is in service at the vicarage as a stepping stone to better things and higher wages, merely said, in a loud business-like voice, "Greens," and thrust a cracked dish at him in a truculent manner.

My wife said in a sympathetic voice: "Has he been very trying?"

I did not reply at once, for Mary, setting the greens on the table with a bang, proceeded to thrust a dish of singularly moist and unpleasant dumplings under my nose. I said, "No, thank you," and she deposited the dish with a clatter on the table and left the room.

"It is a pity that I am such a shocking housekeeper," said my wife with a tinge of genuine regret in her voice.

I was inclined to agree with her. My wife's name is Griselda—a highly suitable name for a parson's wife. But there the suitability ends. She is not in the least meek.

"Tell me more about Col. Protheroe," Griselda said.

"Pompous old brute," said Dennis. "No wonder his first wife ran away from him."

"I don't see what else she could do," said my wife.

"Griselda," I said sharply, "I will not have you speaking that way."

"Darling," said my wife affectionately, "tell me about him. What was the trouble? Was it Mr. Hawes?"

"Not this time. He did touch on it in passing. No, the whole trouble arose out of Mrs. Price Ridley's wretched pound note.

Mrs. Price Ridley is a devout member of my congregation. Attending early service on the anniversary of her son's death, she put a pound note into the offertory bag. Later, reading the amount of the collection posted up, she was pained to observe that one ten shilling note was the highest item mentioned.

She complained to me about it, and I pointed out, very reasonably, that she must have made a mistake. My words only seemed to incense her. She said that things had a very odd look and that she was surprised I didn't think so also. And she flounced away and, I gather, took her troubles to Col. Protheroe. Protheroe is the kind of man who enjoys making a fuss on every conceivable occasion. He made a fuss.

"Well, I suppose he must have some fun," said my wife, with the air of trying to sum up the position impartially. "Both his wife and his daughter are fed to the teeth with him. I suppose it makes him happy to feel important somewhere."

"He needn't be offensive about it," I said with some heat. "He wants to go over all the church accounts—in case of defalcations—that was the word he used. Defalcations! Does he suspect me of embezzling the church funds?"

"Nobody would suspect you of anything, darling," said Griselda. "You're so transparently above suspicion that it really would be a marvelous opportunity. I wish you'd embezzle the S. P. G. funds."

I would have reproved her for that sentiment, but Mary entered at that moment with a partially cooked rice pudding.

"Protheroe's coming over tomorrow evening and we're going over the accounts together," I said. "I must finish preparing my talk for the C. E. M. S. today. What are you doing this afternoon, Griselda?"

"My duty," said Griselda. "My duty as the vicaress. Tea and scandal at four-thirty."

Dennis beat a prudent retreat and Griselda and I went together into my study.

"I wonder who we shall have for tea," said Griselda, seating herself on my writing table. "Dr. Stone and Miss Cram, I suppose, and perhaps Mrs. Lestrange. By the way, I called on her yesterday, but she was out. It's so mysterious, isn't it, her arriving like this and taking a house down here, and hardly ever going outside it? Makes one think of detective stories. I believe Dr. Haydock knows something about her."

"You read too many detective stories, Griselda," I observed mildly.

"What about you?" she retorted. "I was looking everywhere for 'The Stain on the Stairs' the other day when you were in here writing a sermon. And at last I came in to ask you if you'd seen it anywhere, and what did I find?"

"I picked it up at random. A chance sentence caught my eye and——"

"I know those chance sentences," said Griselda. She quoted impressively: "And then a very curious thing happened—Griselda rose, crossed the room and kissed her elderly husband affectionately."

She suited the action to the word.

"If you don't mind, dear, I want to get on with the C. E. M. S."

Griselda gave a sigh of intense irritation, ruffled my hair up on end, smoothed it down again, and said:

"You don't deserve me. You really don't. I'll have an affair with the artist. I will—really and truly. And then think of the scandal in the parish."

"There's a good deal already," I said mildly.

Griselda laughed, blew me a kiss, and departed through the window.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

STOP THE BANK ROBBERS
Morris H. Anderson of Dwight, Illinois, has invented a Safety Cage for protecting banks from holdups. The object of the invention provides automatic means, adapted to be controlled by officers of the bank, making it impossible for any one attempting to rob the bank to get away. The employes of the bank are absolutely safe from harm. The Safety Cage can be installed in the offices of big manufacturing concerns where pay rolls are paid in cash and large sums of money used to any extent. It can also be adjusted to cars used in delivering pay rolls.

A-A-A-1

SALESMEN
$12 TO $36 CASH COMMISSIONS PER SALE NOW CAN GROW INTO $1,000 PER SALE WITHIN SIXTY DAYS

We have, in many ways, the most remarkable specialty proposition in the history of selling. We are selling a patent device that is bound to have a broad influence in one of the greatest industries in America. In most every sale this device pays for itself from five times to twenty-five times within a year. In some cases it will pay for itself fifty times over within a year.

Some sales are made to individuals; other sales are made to corporations in lots of a dozen or a hundred or a thousand or more. The earnings of high caliber salesmen who are workers and who will learn this business thoroughly are unlimited.

G. M. just made a sale on which his commission was $5.00. The repeat business on this one sale within sixty days should net this salesman $1,060. C. S. made a sale one day this week on which his commission was $36.00. The additional business from this one deal should net him $3,000 within sixty days. C. B. has been with our organization less than thirty days but has made four other sales as good as this one and has closed about twenty smaller deals. J. G. C. made a sale the day before this ad was written on which his commission totaled $12.00. Within a few weeks the total commissions on this deal will amount to approximately $3,300.

Our business is growing by leaps and bounds. Last week our sales in Chicago were three times the total of the week before. We expect to at least double our sales in Chicago this week. As soon as we reach a certain volume of business which we are approaching rapidly, we will run twelve full pages of advertising weekly here.

We are selling a specialty both to individuals and corporations for which there is an unlimited field—a bigger field than the automobile or radio. A big factor in making sales under present business conditions is that this specialty pays for itself in dollars and cents so many times over within a year. We give a written guarantee with each purchase absolutely covering this saving.

The specialty we sell is unique in that the field and demand is already created for it and there is absolutely no real competition. A firm among the best patent attorneys in America tells us that our patent claims are basic. Their letter is part of our sales kit which comprises scores of letters from users, including corporations, and is one of the most powerful ever utilized.

We want a few more salesmen in Chicago—only the highest caliber men who are real workers and producers—men who know how to size up a deal and who are ready and willing to put their whole heart and soul and their best efforts and real ability and capacity into a genuine opportunity, limited only by themselves.

We are already operating in more than 20 states and are developing a national organization which offers unlimited opportunity as sales executives to men who can rise to the occasion. We emphasize, however, there is no short cut to success in this business. The hardest worker will be the biggest success.

We solicit applications from distributors in outside territories. A nominal investment for merchandise actually needed to fill orders, together with high grade executive sales ability, are all that is necessary.

IF YOU CAN QUALIFY.
CALL, WRITE OR WIRE.

A DIGNIFIED POSITION.

If you are a woman of culture and desire a position of dignity we should like to discuss with you a position as organizer for a most unusual club exclusively for children under the 'teen age. Its name, the Junior Good Habits Club, implies its purpose. Desirable results are assured, for we deal directly with the children, mailing special awards each month for doing the things they should do but seldom do; however, enjoy doing as club members. The membership benefits are numerous, the enrollment fee small, the appeal universal. We furnish a prospective membership list, do magazine advertising, direct advertising, pay transportation, give special co-operation and opportunity for advancement; no canvassing; some traveling. If you are between the ages of 25 and 45, willing to work, educated and have personality, write fully concerning yourself for an immediate interview. Give phone number.

SECOND MORTGAGE LOANS

A five year test has proven conclusively that second mortgage loans can be made at a cost which is not out of proportion to the rates charged on first mortgage loans and other types of recognized and regulated financial transactions.

And these rates which we have introduced in this community and all of the conditions attached to our way of loaning have stood the test of prosperous times, and are standing the test of a period of depression in real estate.

We are making second mortgage loans and invite the home owner who may be looking for new funds or who may be desirous of refinancing a part or all of maturing mortgage financing to make use of the facilities which we offer.

We charge 7% accruing interest and a commission of 3½% for 1 year, 6½% for 2 years, and 9% for 3 years.

LYON & HEALY USED PIANO SALE

We are clearing our floors of more than 250 good used pianos accepted in trade from Chicago homes and studios during the last year.

Its time to get in new fall stock and these instruments must go, even though at the greatest sacrifice that pianos of such quality were ever sold. Every one is in good condition and carries the usual Lyon & Healy guarantee. They are splendid bargains for churches, schools, clubs, hotels, ballrooms, summer homes, etc. Excellent for children's practice hours. The extremely low prices are no indication of their value—they simply must go now. Read this list of representative values and come to the Lyon & Healy Loop Store early tomorrow for the best selection.

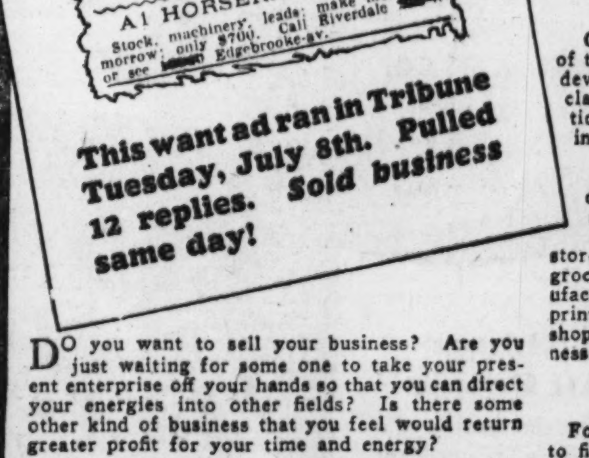
Use this Quick, Inexpensive Method to turn your Enterprise into CASH!



BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.
A1 HORSERADISH BUS. Stock, machinery, leads; make money tomorrow; only $700. Call Riverdale [redacted] or see [redacted] Edgebrooke-av.

This want ad ran in Tribune Tuesday, July 8th. Pulled 12 replies. Sold business same day!

Do you want to sell your business? Are you just waiting for some one to take your present enterprise off your hands so that you can direct your energies into other fields? Is there some other kind of business that you feel would return greater profit for your time and energy?

There is no need for you to sit and wish that someone would come along and make an offer. If you really want to do something about it, if you really are sincere about wanting to get into another line, there is a definite method by which you can turn your present business into cash. And you can do it NOW. Here are the plain facts:

All These Prospects Are Waiting:

In Chicago and suburbs and throughout the populous surrounding states, there are at all times scores of thousands of alert men and women who are looking for opportunities to go into business for themselves. They are men and women of wide experience in all kinds of pursuits—selling, manufacturing, managing, performing personal service—all types of executives and workers who have been saving up their money against the day when the right chance would come along to buy a business of their own.

How the Tribune Can Help You

All these people make up a tremendous list of prospects who might be interested in your business. But they never will be interested until you tell them about what you have to offer. And right here is where the Chicago Tribune can help you, just as it has helped thousands of other people with businesses to sell.

Every Sunday the Chicago Tribune is read by more than a million families living in Chicago and suburbs and in thousands of towns and cities throughout the five states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, Iowa, and Michigan. For years these people have turned to one section of the Tribune which holds the attention of practically everybody to satisfy their wants. This is the Want Ad Section, where buyers and sellers of almost every commodity meet and transact business.

A Want Ad Can Do the Job!

One of the most popular, most thoroughly read of the Tribune Want Ad classifications is the one devoted to business opportunities. Here is the classification that engages the interested attention of the alert men and women who are looking for chances to own a business of their own.

Here they find listed practically every kind of business under the sun—bakeries, barber shops, beauty parlors, cafes, candy stores, cigar stores, delicatessens, dental offices, drug stores, filling stations, garages, hardware stores, grocery stores, hotels, mail order businesses, manufacturing concerns, meat markets, music stores, print shops, restaurants, rooming houses, tailor shops—and in addition, a host of unusual businesses that cannot be classified.

Here Is Your Chance!

For a few dollars—whatever you want to spend to find a cash buyer for your business—you can place a result-getting want ad in this Business Opportunities classification, where it can get across its message to the scores of thousands of prospects who watch these offerings for their big chance.

Other business men have used this method to sell their enterprises. They have had remarkable success. There is no reason why you cannot take advantage of it with equal success.

"from cream-colored mice to a 57-room house.."

IN such striking terms does Mrs. E. M.* describe the great range of opportunities for satisfaction and profit which Tribune Want Ads offer. Hardly a want exists that does not find solution and satisfaction in the Want Ad Section. A new home, a lost friend, a car for the family, a loan to pay taxes—for help in such matters thousands daily turn to Tribune Want Ads.

The stories of what want ads have done are fascinating. Hidden in these brief messages are fortunes, long desired opportunities and bargains. Want ads are tremendous factors for happiness and advancement in daily life.

"It has helped us in a dozen ways to become acquainted with Chicago and its suburbs. It began helping us by supplying the name of a moving company. Now it tells us where to go, what to see and what to hear."—R. S. A.*

"My husband's position obtained through the Want Ad Section made it possible to purchase our home through the same medium, and furnishings to a large extent were added by close scrutiny of these columns. When we reached the point where we could afford a luxury, these same columns brought us our auto and radio. So you see it would be entirely proper to label our home, Built—Financed—Furnished and Operated by Tribune Want Ads."—Mrs. E. E.*

If you have not been reading the Want Ad Section of the Chicago Tribune, you have been out of touch with a vast market where thousands every day offer their goods and services at money-saving prices.

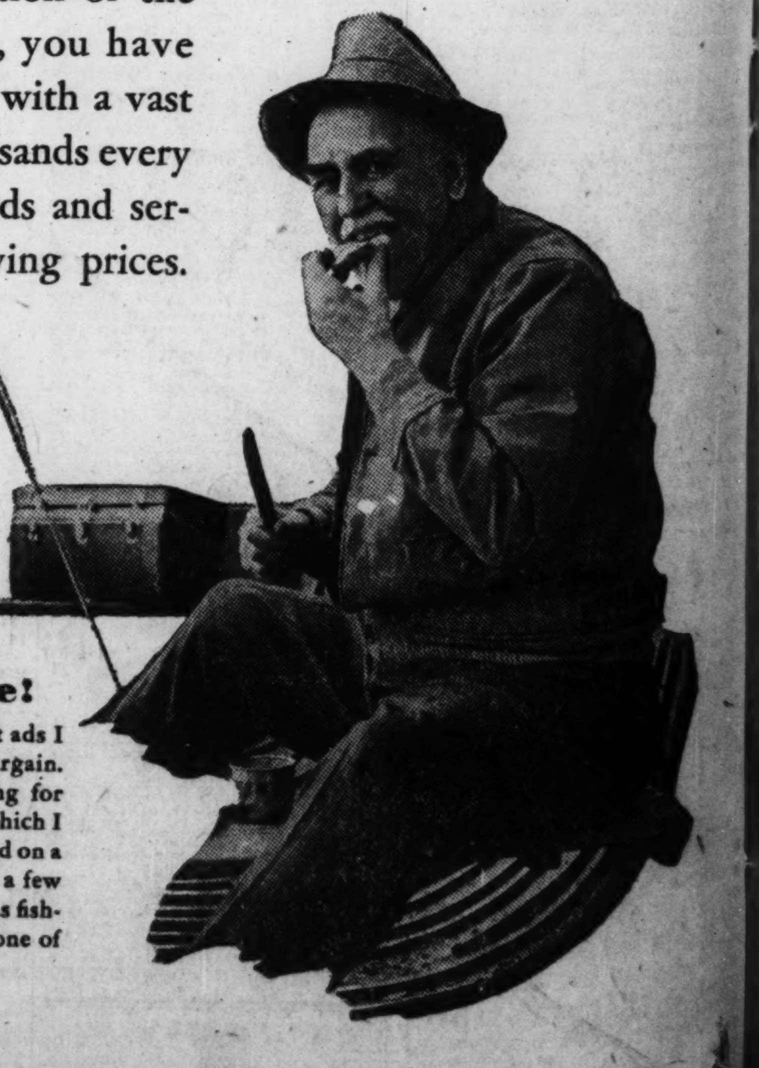
Friend, Counselor and Guide

"Twenty-three years ago I answered my first Tribune Want Ad and it turned out to be the start of steady work, as it gave me my first position. Ever since, whenever I am in want of anything I always turn to the Want Ads of the Tribune for it, where I always find what I want."—G. A. B.*

Many successful business men and women look back to the day they answered a Tribune Want Ad as the turning point in their business success. And as it started them on the right road it is still today the means by which youth finds a market for its ability and experienced workers improve their positions.

All Things to All People

It takes but the reading of a single Sunday's Tribune Want Ads to get a picture of the amazing scope of services these bustling little ads perform. With prompt action they put a want before hundreds of thousands of Tribune readers. Buyers respond immediately—an amazing testimony to the implicit confidence placed in the Tribune Want Ad Section.



Sports – Mansize!

"While following up your want ads I noticed a very interesting bargain. Something I have been looking for some time, a summer cottage, which I saw was very reasonable. Located on a lake where I think I can get in a few days of honest-to-gosh fishing, as fishing, boating and swimming is one of my failings."—J. H. A.*
